LIGHT AND SHADOW

Harsh reality intrudes into a scene with a very Amorsolo feeling at the Barungison River in Maigo, Lanao del Norte, where about 600 MILF members mounted an offensive last Thursday, killing two and holding hostage 300 people until the military counterattacked. So a soldier needs to keep watch while his buddy dips into the portrait.

New kidney,
new life for Abadilla 5
death convict

By Stella O. Gonzales

ONE of the five men sentenced to death for the 1996 killing of ex-Col. Rolando Abadilla has a new lease on life in the form of a transplanted kidney.

After eight months of waiting for a donor, Lenido Lumanog is recovering well after receiving a kidney from his wife, Marilou. Both spouses are 46.

The transplant surgery, performed last Tuesday at the National Kidney and Transplant Institute (NKTI) in Quezon City, took two and a half hours.

Lumanog was thankful to all those who helped make the transplant surgery possible, especially First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo who promised to help him after learning of his plight through an INQUIRER series on the "Abadilla 5" last December.

"So far so good" was how the transplant surgeon, Dr. Caesar Casanova, described his patient's condition. "The donated kidney is functioning well for his body."

Indeed, Lumanog yesterday told the INQUIRER that it was as if the donated organ was tailor-made for him.

"The doctors said Marilou's kidney was good—like it was God-given," he said in Filipino.

The Abadilla 5—Lumanog, Cesar Fortuna, Joel de Jesus, Ramees de Jesus and Augusto Santos—are facing the death penalty for the killing of Abadilla, an intelligence officer during the martial law regime.

The sentence was handed down on the basis of the five men's alleged "tortured" confessions and the uncorroborated testimony of a lone witness, and despite repeated claims by the communist hit squad Alex Boncayao Brigade that it was responsible for the assassination.

The five men were placed on Death Row in August 1999. But last August, the Supreme Court allowed Lumanog to be one who took you out to lunch at Luk Yu Tea House to tell you about the latest products in non-deliverable derivatives.

WHEN was the last time you felt gen-

The quintessential fiber of happiness—trust—has been stolen from mankind. Hong Kong is just a glimpse of how things will soon become in most ma-

Bored in isolation, JP asks for television set

By Joey A. Gabieta

PALO, Leyte—The only thing she asked for was a television set, apparently to ward off boredom while confined with her husband in the isolation room of the Eastern Visayas Regional Medical Center (EVRMC) in Tacloban City.

JP, who is suspected to be suffering from Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, did not show any signs of depression during her first night at the EVRMC, said Dr. Alden Tabao, the hospital's chief of surgery.

JP and her husband will stay in the isolation room, located at the annex building, for the next 13 days.

So far, health officials noted that JP was showing signs of recovery.

"She is in high spirits. She has no fever and is ambulatory. She was able to sleep well last night," said Tabao.

Her blood pressure was also normal, he added.

WHO: OFWs chief carriers of SARS virus into country

THE WORLD Health Organization admitted that overseas Filipino workers could be the Philippines' chief carriers of SARS, but urged the public to treat them kindly.

WHO country representative Jean Marc Olive said the cases of Adela Catalon and JP, who worked in Canada and Hong Kong, respectively, showed a pattern that OFWs were the carriers of the deadly virus here.

Firms rush to protect their assets

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

WITH the loss of the country's SARS-free status, top corporations have undertaken precautionary measures against the epidemic to protect their most valuable resources—their employees.

Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry corporate secretary Donald Dee said that most of the country's top corporations have already stocked up on N95-type respiratory masks for distribution to their employees next week.

Dee said the masks would not only help prevent or contain the SARS virus from FIRMS / A7

MILITANT groups slammed Malacafang yesterday for "trivializing" the observance of Labor Day next week by offering workers free train rides, concerts and basketball games.

These freebies not only gloss over the fact that no new incentives for labor are being offered this year, they also mock the centennial of the country's first Labor Day rally celebrated in 1903, the Kilusang Mayo Uno said.

The Department of Labor and Employment is said to be offering workers free concerts at the Rizal Park, free bleacher seats to Philippine Basketball Association games and free MRT and LRT rides on May 1.

In a press forum, KMU chair Elmer Labog also faulted the Palace for giving private employers the option of choosing when to give their employees a holiday—either on May 1 or 2. The two days have been declared non-working holidays for government employees.

This flexibility would enable private employers to deny their employees the opportunity to join May Day protest actions, Labog said.

"While workers are fighting for life-and-death (issues) like urgent economic relief through higher wages, just benefits and job security, Dole and Malacafang merely countered our demands with trivial freebies," he said.

The KMU said it was mobilizing around 50,000 protesters in Metro Manila alone on May 1.

This year's rallies will mark the 100th anniversary of the first Labor Day march in the country in 1903, which was led by the Union Obrera Democratica.

Labog recalled how some 100,000 people marched to Malacafang that day, shouting "Death to Imperialism" and condemning US military atrocities during the Philippine-American war.

In another forum, the Alliance of Progressive Labor yesterday branded as an "insult" to workers a business organization's recent proposal of a 10-year strike ban in exchange for generation of millions of new jobs.

"The workers' right to strike is not the cause of unemployment in the country," said APL chair Daniel Edralin. "It is a fact that (the number of) strikes has declined in the past 10 years and yet unemployment has been rising."

Tausugs now want war games in Sulu

JOLO, Sulu—At least 3,000 Tausugs showed up at a rally here yesterday in support of proposed joint military exercises with the United States.

The rally was organized by provincial and municipal officials led by Luuk town mayor Abdurahman Arbison and his son, Rep. Munir Arbison.

Gov. Yusop Jikiri said the turnout, considered impressive by many because of perceptions that the Sulu Tausugs were against the war games, made them more confident that residents of the island-province have thrown their full support behind Balikatan 03-1.

"If we keep on doing this effort, we can generate more than 70 percent support from the people," said Jikiri after the rally, dubbed "Enlightenment on Balikatan 03-1."

Jikiri later admitted that the rally was aimed at helping President Macapagal-Arroyo counter the criticism against the war exercises and the presence of US troops.

Of the province's 18 town mayors, only Jolo Mayor Suhod Tan did not attend, although he sent a representative.

Tan had earlier said the Tausugs did not need the Americans.

He had said that what the people of Sulu need more are projects to alleviate poverty and not more war.

But Jikiri said that even if Tan was not present, the mayor had "expressed his full support for this endeavor."

In a speech read for him by Jolo Councilor Edsir Tan, Mayor Tan urged the Tausugs to "look closely at the advantages and disadvantages of the Balikatan and let us not allow such military exercise to become a divisive factor in our unity."

Southern Command chief Maj. Gen. Roy Kyamko on Friday declared that majority of Tausugs wanted the Balikatan.

He said the province's 17 mayors had signed a manifesto expressing their support for the war games.

Ahmad Jamad, 77, a World War II veteran and resident of Panglina Estino, said the Americans were not the evil that some people want the Tausugs to believe.

"I was with the Americans before, fighting alongside them against the Japanese occupation. They were good to me," Jamad said.

Hadj Timbas Abdualim, another war veteran from Tapul island, said the presence of US forces in Sulu might just speed up the processing of benefits of war veterans like himself. Julie S. Alipala, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Court junks graft case vs Danding

THE SANDIGANBAYAN has declared "null and void" a 1989 graft case filed against businessman Eduardo "Danding" Cojuangco in connection with his acquisition of shares in the Bulletin Publishing Corp. allegedly in behalf of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos.

The anti-graft court said the Presidential Commission on Good Government had erred in assuming two independent functions in the prosecution of the case—gathering the evidence and then conducting the preliminary investigation.

The PCGG should have left the preliminary investigation to "the proper investigating official," mainly the Office of the Ombudsman, the Sandiganbayan's Fifth Division said in an eight-page resolution.

The case is not yet considered dismissed, however, as the court said the PCGG should transmit the case records to the Ombudsman "for appropriate action."

The ruling quoted an earlier Supreme Court decision dismissing two other graft cases against Cojuangco in connection with the controversial coconut levy funds.

In the quoted jurisprudence, the SC found the PCGG's performance of the dual roles to be "arbitrary and unjust."

The 1989 case sought the forfeiture by Cojuangco of his shares in the Bulletin Publishing Corp., which he had allegedly acquired for Marcos between 1973 and 1985. At the time the case was filed, Cojuangco was said to control 54 percent of the company. Volt Contreras

Faithful mark Feast of Mercy

THIS SUNDAY the Divine Mercy Channel, the only Catholic TV network in Asia, will cover the day-long celebration of the Feast of Mercy at the Lee Erwin Theater, Ateneo de Manila grade school. There will be three Masses—12:30 p.m., 3:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m.—healing sessions and confessions.

The Feast of Mercy honors St. Mary Faustina, who is believed to have received extraordinary promises from the Lord. On this day, the faithful will be granted plenary indulgence by Pope John Paul II, according to the Vatican.

The day should be marked by solemnity, extolling the mercy of God, confessing one's sins, receiving Holy Communion and performing works of mercy, the Vatican said.

St. Faustina's 600-page diary, "Divine Mercy in my Soul" was declared by Pope John Paul II to be the Word of God. It contains at least 14 passages in which Jesus Christ asks that a Feast of Mercy be officially established in the Catholic Church.

Christ reportedly told Faustina in the mid-1930s: "This feast emerged from the very depths of My mercy, and it is confirmed in the vast depths of My mercies... It is My desire that the first Sunday after Easter be solemnly celebrated... I desire that the Feast of Mercy be a refuge of sinners."

The Feast of Mercy, a private devotion since 1935, spread like wildfire worldwide and was declared an official feast of the Catholic Church during the canonization of St. Faustina in 2000.

Plan to sell RP properties in US hatched two years ago

By Norman Bordadora

THE PLAN to sell some of the country's properties in the United States was hatched some two years ago when Vice President Teofisto Guingona Jr. was the foreign affairs secretary and proposed the sale of at least two pieces of real estate in Houston and Seattle.

Alberto del Rosario, Philippine ambassador to Washington, said that top officials had deliberated on Guingona's proposal to sell the US assets and that it was decided that the Houston and Seattle properties had to go.

The INQUIRER tried to contact Guingona but he was in an "emergency meeting" at press time.

In an interview, Del Rosario said that non-performing real estate assets like the Houston and Seattle properties, along with the old Philippine Chancery in Washington, were being prioritized in the government's bid to dispose of its expensive "gray elephants" in the US.

"(These pieces of property) are in a state of accelerated deterioration due to the absence of maintenance funds. Our view is that retaining them would be grossly disadvantageous to the government," Del Rosario said.

The ambassador said that embassy officials would be even more liable administratively if they insisted on retaining these properties than if they were to work to dispose of them properly.

"Unless the government is prepared to immediately allocate the enormous outlays for the total overhaul and renovation of these properties and their subsequent maintenance, holding on to them would result in greater losses and may be construed as gross negligence," he said.

As to criticism that selling these assets at a time when the real estate market in the US was soft and prices low, Del Rosario said that on the contrary the same market conditions would be advantageous to the government.

"While the real estate market may be soft at this time, it would still be prudent for us to evaluate the mounting losses and the heavy costs of rehabilitation as compared to the lower sales proceeds to be obtained in the current market," Del Rosario said.

With the proceeds from the sale, the government would then be "in an advantageous position" to acquire more suitable properties that it requires from the same soft market, he said.

Del Rosario said the chancery in Washington, the former consulate residence in Houston and the vacant lot in Seattle must be sold immediately because of their advanced state of deterioration and idleness.

Plan to sell RP properties in US hatched two years ago

By Norman Bordadora

THE PLAN to sell some of the country's properties in the United States was hatched some two years ago when Vice President Teofisto Guingona Jr. was the foreign affairs secretary and proposed the sale of at least two pieces of real estate in Houston and Seattle.

Alberto del Rosario, Philippine ambassador to Washington, said that top officials had deliberated on Guingona's proposal to sell the US assets and that it was decided that the Houston and Seattle properties had to go.

The INQUIRER tried to contact Guingona but he was in an "emergency meeting" at press time.

In an interview, Del Rosario said that non-performing real estate assets like the Houston and Seattle properties, along with the old Philippine Chancery in Washington, were being prioritized in the government's bid to dispose of its expensive "gray elephants" in the US.

"These pieces of property are in a state of accelerated deterioration due to the absence of maintenance funds. Our view is that retaining them would be grossly disadvantageous to the government," Del Rosario said.

The ambassador said that embassy officials would be even more liable administratively if they insisted on retaining these properties than if they were to work to dispose of them properly.

"Unless the government is prepared to immediately allocate the enormous outlays for the total overhaul and renovation of these properties and their subsequent maintenance, holding on to them would result in greater losses and may be construed as gross negligence," he said.

As to criticism that selling these assets at a time when the real estate market in the US was soft and prices low, Del Rosario said that on the contrary the same market conditions would be advantageous to the government.

"While the real estate market may be soft at this time, it would still be prudent for us to evaluate the mounting losses and the heavy costs of rehabilitation as compared to the lower sales proceeds to be obtained in the current market," Del Rosario said.

With the proceeds from the sale, the government would then be "in an advantageous position" to acquire more suitable properties that it requires from the same soft market, he said.

Del Rosario said the chancery in Washington, the former consular residence in Houston and the vacant lot in Seattle must be sold immediately because of their advanced state of deterioration and idleness.

'Angry' FVR denies he is running; raps dynasties, turncoats

BAGUIO CITY—Miffed that his name continues to be floated in connection with the 2004 presidential elections, former President Fidel V. Ramos said Friday amendments to the Constitution should be fast-tracked in order to rid Philippine politics of dynasties and turncoats who are nothing but opportunists.

Ramos, Lakas-CMD chair emeritus, was reacting to an INQUIRER report that said administration party members were working for his inclusion in the list of Lakas presidential candidates. The item quoted former Ifugao Rep. Gualberto Lumaig, a member of the Lakas media bureau.

"I never authorized Lumaig to say those things . . . and he is in no position in the Lakas bureaucracy to make those (calls). Gasgas na iyang story na iyan (That story is old hat)," he told the INQUIRER.

Addressing the annual assembly of the Semiconductor and Electronics Industries in the Philippines Inc. (Seipi), a 100-company alliance of electronics exporters, Ramos said the 1987 Constitution frowns on political dynasties and turncoats, but this policy is not explicitly stated. Instead, the Constitution relied on Congress to come up with an enabling law.

But no congressman since the 8th Congress to the present 12th Congress has filed such a measure because it would destroy political careers, Ramos said.

He said politicians "bypass" the three-consecutive terms limit enshrined in the 1987 Constitution by "getting their wives, children and in-laws to run for the position."

"This breeds not only graft and corruption but elitism and greed," he said.

Turncoatism, he said, also affects governance because flimsy party loyalties often tempt aspirants to bargain their candidacies for party war chests. He said these accommodations are repaid once the politician wins an election.

Ramos has repeatedly declared he is not interested in running for president again. Vincent Cabreza, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

tor, you can't trust anyone. If it helps alleviate the guilt, nobody trusts you either.

Let's take a walk down the streets of Hong Kong—ground zero if you will—and check out the scene on the ground.

You find yourself within kissing distance of a dream face that is matched by charming manners. Normally you would have already decided to call in sick tomorrow. Times are different. It's a mean heart-breaker that both of you know very well that this is as good as the evening will, or more sadly, should get. One more irresponsible inch closer and two lives are put on the line. There will be no kissing, not to mention the ultimate evening clincher—sharing the night—not even a sensual invitation of two warm hands clasped lightly underneath a bar table.

It took Hong Kong the better part of three decades to import, modify, fine-tune and perfect the western bar scene. SARS needed a few miserable weeks to reduce the trophy of that achievement into rubble. SARS took the promise out an adventurous Lan Kwai Fong evening. To far too many of us, this means loneliness without the romance of a rescue.

Dining-out rituals, protocols

These days, restaurants take your phone-in dinner reservation as a crank call. Take a look around—reservation is a nostalgic concept. Calling ahead before going out to dinner is still in—to confirm that the restaurant is still open for business. Dining out is out. Anything out is out.

Forget the à la carte menu. No prudent chef is crazy enough to stock exotic items on the off-chance that a discerning patron works up the nerve to brave the forbidden journey from the secure bunker of home to his joint. We get SARS-savvy and ask the chef to "whip something up." On a brighter note, wines are not affected and diners continue to enjoy the finest.

The mask

Forget the $900 new bluish gray suit with a hint of purple under white lights. It clashes with the surgical face mask. Everything clashes with the dreaded mask, a fashion disaster. Of course, the mask is not for your protection. It is common courtesy extended to those who are too shy and bar-groomed for outright refusals to social contacts. Without one, you'd be lucky to get a wink and a smile for the whole evening.

Masks on faces of the service crew in all walks of work give beauty queens a rare glimpse of what life without talent would have been like. Perhaps this levels the playing field a bit. I am not sure it is safe to approach a lady and within five small-talk exchanges, boldly ask her if she could take it off. Interesting to see what results a woman gets with the same approach to a hunk of fancy.

Unfamiliar courtesy

The courtesy in the waiting lines at boarding gates in the HK International Airport is utterly flattering to the city. SARS actually succeeded where years of education had failed miserably to achieve—rid society of the familiar pushing and shoving. I have to confess I do miss it a little.

Now I actually have to consciously move my feet, one at a time, to keep up with the person in front. Nobody wants to sneeze in public. That's social suicide—second only to wearing green lipstick and bleached fangs. Someone in the line let loose a loud sneeze whose magnitude betrays the tenacity of its futile restraint. Lord knows he did try his very best to hold it back. There is a bonus. Before he knows it, he has passed everyone and is up next. Everyone lined up ahead of him had left the line.

Business is hurting, as everybody knows. Swaying insidiously in uncertainty are the dominos in a spiral chain reaction, potentially even more deadly than SARS. It is the impact on the economy, or even more threatening, its perception that drives the nail into the coffin. Not to worry. The behavior of the economy is cyclical and business will always bounce back. The impact is much farther reaching than that.

Compassion compels us to forgive the introduction of croissants, highlight of the new cost-cutting program, in place of the once much heralded in-flight meals of this fabulously successful airline. Personally, I think the CX management team deserves kudos for the quick move to tell us, passengers and shareholders alike that the company's bottom line is brightly lit on their radar screen. Last thing I want to do is to fly with a crashing airline. But look at the far-reaching effects of SARS. Who would have guessed that this little virus is changing the stuff airlines put on our plates?

Public humiliation

By the time you reach departure floor on HK International Airport, you'd figure you'd made it, that the ordeal is over and you have once again beaten the odds.

When was the last time you allowed something into your earlobes and didn't enjoy it? Being probed in the ear for a temperature check in public is a humiliating experience. I put up with it as graciously as I could, or else I wouldn't make it to the check-in counters. I couldn't help reminiscing on how good I once had it all. I miss the dignity of walking unchallenged up to a counter and saying, "CX901 to Manila, aisle seat windows row please."

To sum up, the following are the direct/indirect impact of SARS on the lifestyles of ordinary HK residents:

(Listed in no particular order of humidity)

- The old tradition of a polite Chinese nod accompanies the "how are you?" in place of the now-defunct custom of a handshake.
- Parents spend unprecedented amount of time with their children.
- Children suffer from fatigue having to work overtime to entertain cooped-up parents.
- Businesses chalked $2 billion in losses, and counting.
- Noise pollution threatens as a real social problem as mahjong climbs back to grace.
- Six HK/Manila flights a day for Cathay Pacific now down to just two.
- Wives panic in unfamiliar quarters at home—the kitchen—as husbands pretend to enjoy home cooking.
- Husbands remember anniversaries and wives' birthdays.
- Ten major restaurants called it quits.

spreading but they would also serve as a good reminder to the public on the seriousness of the epidemic.

Dee said the PCCI has likewise encouraged its members nationwide to hold information seminars among their employees to explain the SARS virus, how it is transmitted, and what are the best means of protection.

SMC

Food and beverage giant San Miguel Corp., one of the largest employers in the country, has announced a SARS-prevention strategy that is likely to be duplicated in other companies nationwide.

In a statement, SMC said it has issued N95-type respiratory masks to all its employees and guests entering its plants and offices.

All SMC employees are required to undergo body temperature checks similar to those conducted in the country's international airports and ports of entry.

Housing facility

The company has likewise set up a SARS screening procedure where returning employees and guests who come from SARS-infected countries would be given a temporary housing facility for a mandatory 10-day quarantine; implemented an intensive information campaign to prevent SARS; and opened a hotline to handle inquiries and referrals.

The same precautionary measures were expected to be adopted by SMC's subsidiaries Purefoods Corp., La Tondeña Distillers Inc., Coca-Cola Bottlers Philippines Inc.

No trips

Dee said that most garments and electronic firms, whose export-oriented businesses require frequent travels among its top officers, have adopted a moratorium on trips to SARS-infected countries.

Toyota Motor Philippines Corp., the country's leading vehicle assembler, said top managers had to resort to more teleconferences with their counterparts from Asean and Japan in the last few weeks to facilitate their transactions.

Aside from masks and information blitzes, former Trade and Industry Secretary Jose Concepcion Jr. has taken a different strategy in handling SARS. Concepcion said Barangay Forbes has agreed to give an anti-flu vaccine to its constituents at P400 per shot or 16 percent off its standard price of P475. Concepcion said the vaccine would be effective for one year.

PLDT

Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. spokesperson Ramon Isberto said it would be safe to assume that overseas calls have surged in the past few weeks due to concern from OFWs and relatives from abroad on the SARS situation in the country. Although he admitted it's difficult to determine whether a rise in the volume of overseas calls would be traced to concerns over SARS.

IN A 24-HOUR period last week, from Wednesday afternoon to Thursday morning, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front struck thrice in two provinces. The attacks left 19 persons dead.

Also on Thursday, President Macapagal-Arroyo launched her P5.5-billion Mindanao National Initiative at the 1st Muslim Summit in Manila, but the good intentions were all but drowned in the backwash of grim EDITORIAL statistics. Four civilians were killed in Carmen, North Cotabato, in what the MILF acknowledged to be an assassination. Ten civilians and one rebel were killed in Kolambungan, Lanao del Norte. And two civilians and two rebels were killed in Maigo in the same province. Some 20 civilians, mostly passengers stranded when the rebels seized portions of the national highway that runs through Lanao del Norte and connects the capital town of Tubod with the industrial city of Iligan, were also injured. Most chillingly, the MILF temporarily held more than 300 people hostage when the military counter-attacked. At least three police officers remain in captivity.

We condemn these attacks in the strongest possible terms. It seems likely that the offensives in Lanao del Norte, begun an hour apart, were aimed at a takeover of Maigo, in the same way that the rebels had briefly occupied Kauswagan three years ago.

An ex-hostage of the MILF force—led by Adburahman Macapaar, also known as Commander Bravo—described the Lanao attacks as “plain banditry.” Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Narciso Abaya said he saw the attacks as an extortion try that had spiraled into an attempt “to disrupt the Palarong Pambansa.” Defense Secretary Angelo Reyes read the attacks as an attempt to embarrass national and local government officials, in view of the national games slated to start on May 4 in Tubod. The President had the direst view: She denounced the attacks as a “travesty of the peace process.”

“The perpetrators are terribly mistaken if they think they can obtain concessions in the peace talks by this dastardly act,” the President said.

Dastardly as the attacks have been, the Macapagal administration is not completely without fault. On Thursday, the President ordered a three-pronged military response, including “active defense of the affected communities.” She was merely acting true to form.

The concept of “active defense” is new in the Philippine context; it entered the public discourse only after a massive one-week AFP offensive overrun MILF positions in the so-called Buliok complex in North Cotabato and Maguindanao last February. Despite the unequivocal victory, fighting continued in the area and even beyond. Pressed, the President justified the continuing military action, calling the strategy one of “active defense.”

Mocking the President, the MILF has appropriated the new doctrine. Last Thursday, rebel spokesperson Eid Kalbu also justified the Lanao del Norte attacks as “active defense.” The concept means fighting outside the perimeter, the better to defend a given position. In reality, as both the military and the MILF have shown, it means bringing the fight to the enemy. It is a defense only in the loosest possible meaning of the term.

But the MILF is not hitting targets only to prove it can play Malacañang’s own rhetorical game. The rebels are hitting back, mounting guerrilla assaults, because they have been forced to, because the Buliok offensive drove them into a corner. Reyes and his generals have told the INQUIRER, in frank discussions, that they believe the acts blamed on the MILF since the fall of Buliok—the bombings in Davao City, the downing of power transmission towers, the skirmishes in four provinces—would still have been committed even if Buliok had not fallen.

We do not agree. We think that the relative lull in armed encounters between the AFP and the MILF before Buliok, though marred by violations of ceasefire terms on both sides, was more conducive to peace talks than what we have now, a cynical state of “active defense.” We think that the spike in violence since February is directly linked to the MILF’s loss of Buliok. We think, finally, that the military, while paying lip service to the peace process, overestimated its capacity. The result is a separatist rebellion that is unshocked, unawed, and on a rampage.

Jesus and Mary Magdalene

SEPARATE OPINION

Isagani A. Cruz

AS in years past, I read through the Gospels last Holy Week for the renewal of my faith and the remission of my sins. As before, the same unanswered question nagged me: Who was Mary Magdalene?

Next only to the Virgin Mary, she played the most prominent role in the life and death of Jesus Christ.

She was probably the adulteress whom the irate mob wanted to stone to death according to the law of Moses. Jesus saved her life by saying, “Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.”

It was that incident that must have changed her wanton ways and made her a devoted follower of Jesus.

In all the four Gospels, Mary Magdalene was among the women who grieved at the crucifixion and death of Jesus Christ.

In Matthew, “Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to look at the tomb” and bring spices to Jesus on the third day of his burial.

In Mark, “after Jesus rose from death early on Sunday, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, from whom he had driven out seven devils.”

In Luke, the women who went to Jesus’ tomb that Sunday morning were “Mary Magdalene, Joanna, and Mary the mother of James.”

In John, “early on Sunday morning, while it was still dark, Mary Magdalene went to the tomb and saw that the stone had been taken away from the entrance... She told the other disciples, who came running to the tomb...

“Mary stood crying outside the tomb...” Then she saw two angels dressed in white who asked her why she was crying. “They have taken my Lord away,” she said, “and I do not know where they have put him.”

“Then she turned around and saw Jesus standing there, but she did not know that it was he. ‘Woman, why are you crying?’ Jesus asked. ‘Who is it that you are looking for?’

Thinking he was the gardener, she said, ‘If you took him away, sir, tell me where you have put him and I will go and get him.’

Jesus said to her, “Mary!” And she turned toward him and said, “Teacher!”

In all the four Gospels, Mary Magdalene went that Sunday to the tomb of Jesus and found it empty. And according to Mark and John, it was before Mary Magdalene that the Risen Lord first appeared.

Not before his mother the Virgin Mary, not before Peter and the rest of the disciples, but before Mary Magdalene, the reformed sinner.

Was there a special relationship between Jesus Christ and Mary Magdalene?

Many people may have asked this question but only in their mind for fear of being called sacrilegious. I will openly ask it, though, but in good faith, without mockery or blasphemy, but in a spirit of reverent curiosity.

I am sure there was a strong spiritual bond between Jesus and Mary Magdalene, but was there more? Could there have been a personal and physical attraction between them not unlike the sensual feelings of a man and a woman for each other?

Jesus Christ came into this world as a human being with all the natural emotions of a man, including love and hate. Remember his anger with the merchants who made the Temple of God “a den of thieves”?

He was a mortal man who carried the heavy Cross to Golgotha and suffered the agony of his crucifixion. And did he not, before his death, make the plaintive human cry, “My God, my God, why has thou forsaken me?”

For her part, Mary Magdalene led a prurient life before she was converted. Her passion was for the flesh before she saw the true path. Could there have been a residue of her old ways that made her look at Jesus not with total piety but with a spark of earthly love?

If we are to believe the image the Renaissance painters gave him, Jesus Christ was a handsome man for whom many a woman might have swooned. He was also a forceful and charismatic speaker whose virtue and wisdom added to his appeal. Mary Magdalene could have been like the teenagers of today idolizing some rock singer.

Is this irreverent speculation? It is only a closer look, and well-meaning wonderment over the special relationship between Jesus and Mary Magdalene that the four evangelists narrated without malice or concealment.

As a worshipful layman, I recognize the strong spiritual tie between Mary Magdalene and Jesus, who saved her life and soul. But as a romantic, I cannot help imagining, without sinning, that Mary Magdalene loved Jesus not only as her Messiah but as a human being born as the Son of Man.

There must have been something else that made Mary Magdalene go to Jesus’ tomb that early Sunday morning to bring him spices. Were they more than gifts of grief? And there must also have been a reason why it was before Mary Magdalene, and not anyone else, that the Risen Lord first chose to appear.

If there be such a thing as platonic love, that must have been the unspoken bond between Mary Magdalene and Jesus. Considering their divinity, I am sure they rejected all mundane temptations and kept sacred the will of God. They were close to each other but only in spirituality and prayer and not physical attraction.

Still they must have made a handsome couple—Jesus with his magnetic eyes and a carpenter’s physique, and Mary Magdalene with the courtesan’s beauty of face and grace of figure. Too impious a fancy? I will say no more lest I burn in the fires of hell.

Weekend lover

MOMENTS

Fr. Jerry M.
Orbos, SVD

then Easter would not just be a weekend, and we would not just be weekend lovers.

Easter anything bothering you right now? Remember, in every pain, in every sorrow, in every failure, God Easter!

I would like to share this e-mail I received with all of you who don’t want to be just weekend lovers of the Lord:

Everything I need to know, I learned from Noah’s Ark...

One: Don’t miss the boat.

Two: Remember that we are all in the same boat.

Three: Plan ahead. It wasn’t raining when Noah built the Ark.

Four: Stay fit. When you’re 60 years old, someone may ask you to do something really big.

Five: Don’t listen to critics; just get on with the job that needs to be done.

Six: Build your future on high ground.

Seven: For safety’s sake, travel in pairs.

Eight: Speed isn’t always an advantage. The snails were on board with the cheetahs.

Nine: When you’re stressed, float a while.

Ten: Remember, the Ark was built by amateurs—the Titanic by professionals.

Eleven: No matter the storm, when you are with God, there’s always a rainbow waiting.

I’m inviting you to join me in the “Walk with God to Manaoag” on May 3, Saturday. We will begin the walk with a blessing at 6 a.m. at the Urdaneta Church. The walk is about three hours. We will have continuous rosary and confession along the way. The Mass in Manaoag will be at 10 a.m. Whether you want to ask something, or you want to thank God for something, join us in this walk which we have been doing since 1989 every first Saturday of May and October.

A moment with the Lord:
Lord, help me to be your lifetime and all-the-time—not just your weekend—lover. Amen.

THE STORY is told that when Joseph of Arimathea, the one who donated the tomb of Jesus, was asked why he gave such a magnificent tomb to someone to be buried in, his reply was: “Okay, He wanted it—but only for the weekend.”

The Gospel today (Jn. 20, 19-30) speaks about the doubt, short-sightedness and even lack of faith pervading among the disciples after Jesus was buried. For them, the road that promised glory had come to an end. Not only that, they were associated with Jesus, and so, their doors were locked, for fear of the Jews.

It was in this atmosphere of gloom and fear that Jesus appeared in their midst, alive as He had promised, and greeted them: “Peace be with you!” It was a greeting of comfort for those who thought they were goner. But more than that, it was a greeting of assurance, understanding and love from Him whom they have abandoned.

Let us not be quick in chiding Thomas, the doubter. While all the other disciples were already filled with Easter joy after the Lord appeared to them, Thomas, who was not with them, still wanted to see the mark of the nails in Jesus’ hands and side. Thomas was being true to himself. He did not want just to get by. He wanted to get real.

How far easier it is to go with the tide and join the crowd. Thomas teaches us that belief is a personal task, a personal decision that each and everyone of us has to personally make even if it involves being persecuted or ostracized. As a text message beautifully put it, “Blessed are they for whom Easter is not a find, but a continuous search; not some fashion, but a real commitment in life.”

The problem with many of us is that Holy Week is just another week that begins on Palm Sunday and ends on Easter Sunday. All the praying, all the sacrifices, all the good works and kindness are buried in the tomb on Good Friday, and what is resurrected on Easter Sunday are the old wicked ways that come back with a vengeance. Instead of joining the crowd that sighs, “Thank God it’s all over; back to normal na naman,” we at Easter should be saying: “Thank you, God. It’s not over. It will never be normal again, because of You and the Resurrection.”

Now, more than ever, “Peace be with you” is God’s message to all mankind. When will we ever stop killing each other? The message remains the same: Stop hurting. Start loving.

Last Monday, April 21, the first caller in my 9 p.m. radio program on ZNN Veritas (846 AM band) was a 10-year-old girl who asked me a question that brought tears to my eyes: “Father, what do I do when my parents fight and quarrel? I am very hurt and confused. I don’t know which side to take. Can we not just live in peace?”

As Maria spoke, with the soft voice of a little angel, many listeners were touched and were sharing their feelings and prayers for this little girl. Her message was so simple and clear: All we want is peace. Please give peace a chance in our family. Papa and Mama, please grow up!

As we go through life, may we never forget the child that is within each one of us, so full of simplicity and humility, so full of hope, content with little things and happy in spite of deprivations

Carpetbaggers and peacekeepers

REVEILLE

Ramon J. Farolan

AFTER THE AMERICAN Civil War (1861-1865) was won by the North, a period of reconstruction followed, with many northerners moving south to take advantage of speculative and commercial opportunities to revive the economy. Some were also sincere, old-fashioned abolitionists wanting to help the Negro in the exercise of his rights brought about by the emancipation of slaves.

Both had one trait in common: they had nothing to tie them down to the South and their only possessions were what was in their bags, which were made of a carpet-like fabric. Thus, they became known as carpetbaggers.

At first, it was the name given to northerners whose only motive for residing in the South was for election to office with the aid of the Negro vote. But gradually the system became a source of plunder and corruption and the term 'carpetbagger' was applied to all northerners. State administrations in the South, protected by US federal troops, were tagged as carpetbag governments.

In an interview on "Nightline" with Ted Koppel, USAID chief Andrew Natsios reported that out of a total AID appropriation of $1.7 billion for Iraq, up to $680 million had already been earmarked to Bechtel Corp. for reconstruction work. Participation in the bidding process was by invitation only and limited to US companies. As Koppel noted, nothing illegal, nothing improper, just part of the spoils of war.

Terry Jones of The Observer, an English newspaper, has a different spin on the matter. He recently wrote: "Welcome aboard the Iraqi gravy train. Congratulations to all the winners of tickets to take part in the greatest rebuilding show on earth." He then proceeded to mention Kellogg Brown & Root (KBR) and Bechtel Corp. as the companies most likely to profit from reconstruction projects worth about $1 billion. KBR is the construction arm of Halliburton, the oil services company whose former CEO was Vice President Dick Cheney. George Schultz, who was secretary of state under the Reagan administration, is with the Bechtel board, along with retired Gen. Jack Sheehan who sits on the Defense Policy Board which advises the Pentagon.

While the shooting in Iraq may have died down, we should proceed with caution on pronouncements. The administration has already named an ambassador to a non-existent government in Baghdad. Usually the first step is to recognize the existence of a state or government and then to establish relations by an exchange of diplomats.

The Philippines has also declared that we are sending a 500-member humanitarian assistance mission to Iraq consisting of 300 AFP personnel, 100 PNP members and 100 medical personnel. They are supposed to leave not later than May 15. That's barely three weeks away.

With regard to the medical contingent, they would probably be most welcome as they had always been wherever our doctors and nurses were deployed. Remember Operation Brotherhood in Indochina.

But the uniformed personnel may be a different matter. We may think of them as peacekeepers but what is important is how the Iraqis will react to their presence, knowing we are allies of Washington. Coalition forces were well-equipped and well-supported during the invasion. I dread to think what would happen to our soldiers if they ever get waylaid by a mob of angry Iraqis. In Mogadishu, a peacekeeping force of American troopers was surrounded and massacred by a swarming horde of poorly armed Somalis.

This is not East Timor. This is Iraq, an Arab country which has been invaded by a coalition of mainly Christian nations. This is the region which gave birth to the suicide bomber. They will not look too kindly on foreign armed elements on their soil.

Why the rush to send 400 soldiers and policemen to Iraq? They haven't even figured out how they will pay them. Lt. Gen. Rodolfo Garcia, AFP vice chief of staff and military spokesperson, was quoted as saying: "We are still looking into the matter."

Possibly part of the answer to this intriguing question can be found in a recent Newsweek magazine column by Jonathan Alter. He wrote: "Smugglers can kill. It may be satisfying to say 'Screw you' to the United Nations and the United States got away with it during the war. But in an occupation, it's not smart. Which is the more likely target of suicide bombers: a barracks full of American soldiers or a barracks full of peacekeepers from around the world? You'd think we could figure out how to run the occupation without presenting such a fat target... I learned last week that many Army officers wanted to airlift 3,000 MPs (military police) from Europe to protect supply lines and police Baghdad. That would have aided the drive to the capital and helped protect institutions like hospitals and museums once combat forces arrived there. But Secretary Donald Rumsfeld apparently decided: no MPs. They would have had to be replaced by reservists. And if more reservists had been called up in the middle of the war, it would have reinforced the criticism that Rumsfeld hadn't sent enough troops. When the real history is written, we may find out that some of the world's oldest treasures were lost to looters in part because someone at the Pentagon suffers from the oldest of human sins—pride."

While the term "peacekeepers" has a ring of nobility, the truth is, we are going to be part of an occupation force in enemy territory and this changes the complexion of the deployment. Perhaps, Sen. Ramon Magsaysay Jr., chair of the Senate defense committee, should take a closer look at these arrangements to make sure that our men are not put in harm's way unnecessarily.

A lovable mutant

AT LARGE

Rina Jimenez-David

PERHAPS the best testimonial for the upcoming "X2" was what my daughter said at the movie's end: "I can't wait to watch 'X3'!"

While many a sequel leaves one yearning for the original, this one, the second installment of the movie adaptations of the popular "X-Men" comics and TV series, truly whets the audience's appetite for more.

Of all the comic-book franchises that have been turned into successful films, "X-Men" really holds the most promise. Its universe is both vast and personal, based on the fantastic framework of a clash between two civilizations—human and mutant—and yet tapping into a rich source of adolescent angst: the desire to be, and yet also the fear of being, different. As producer Lauren Shuler Donner puts it: "It's about misfits, prejudice, about being an outsider and not being understood." It's about being a teenager.

No wonder young people lap it up!

But the "X-Men" franchise also endures because it never seems to run out of compelling characters, the mutants who find themselves equipped with awesome powers which they must control and employ with focus and discipline if these are not to ultimately destroy them and the world. It's the tension between their growing sense of power and their own insecurities stemming from troubled childhoods that keeps us riveted and interested.

IN "X2," the most interesting new mutant on the block is Nightcrawler, played by Alan Cumming, who was also the creepy Saturninus in "Titus." A circus performer before he was ensnared by the mutant nemesis Stryker, Nightcrawler is a powerful teleporter whose freakish appearance (blue skin marred by self-inflicted "angelic" tattoos and a tail) has made him shy and introspective. He is also, according to Stryker's files (check out the cool website), a devout Roman Catholic who may have studied for the priesthood. And it's this contrast between devilish appearance and ability and absolute, angelic faith that makes Nightcrawler a most intriguing and even lovable character.

Panic in a melting pot of microbes

Randy David

BECAUSE of jet travel and mass migration, the world has become quite literally a melting pot of microbes. But because of global communication, it has also accelerated the transmission of a panic more lethal in its consequences than microbes.

The unprecedented movement of large numbers of people across continents has multiplied the risk of transferring microbes to populations that have not developed the antibodies against such diseases. This is how the diseases of white peoples like smallpox, measles and tuberculosis decimated the native populations of the New World, the Pacific islands and Africa. Western colonialism very likely killed more people by the germs it brought than by the weapons it used to subdue the native peoples.

In his fascinating work, "Guns, Germs, and Steel," physiologist Jared Diamond illustrates this: "The Indian population of Hispaniola declined from around 8 million, when Columbus arrived in 1492, to zero by 1535. Measles reached Fiji with a Fijian chief returning from a visit to Australia in 1875, and proceeded to kill about one-quarter of all Fijians then alive. Syphilis, gonorrhea, tuberculosis and influenza arriving with Captain Cook in 1770, followed by a big typhoid epidemic in 1804 and numerous minor epidemics, reduced Hawaii's population from around half a million in 1770 to 84,000 in 1853, the year when smallpox finally reached Hawaii and killed around 10,000 of the survivors."

But the reverse seldom happened, says Diamond. There were relatively few local epidemic diseases awaiting the European colonizers. There was malaria, of course, which, among the tropical illnesses, continues to spell trouble to foreign visitors. But for the most part, the societies the Europeans took over were free from the lethal viruses and bacteria that had plagued much of Europe.

Not anymore. Today in a crowded and mobile world, epidemics can start anywhere and radiate to the destination points of an airline map.

Most epidemics arise from so-called "crowd infectious diseases." Most scientists agree that the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome or SARS virus that first broke out in China's Guangzhou Province late last year could have evolved from animals like ducks or chicken that are kept in pens close to the living quarters of their owners. From there, the virus migrated to Beijing and Hong Kong, and from Hong Kong to Singapore, Taiwan, Toronto, and the rest of the world.

It is perhaps not an accident that the virus would originate from China's most crowded and most economically dynamic centers. These are the nodal points of China's economic miracle that also have the most extensive contacts with the world community. It seems inconceivable that such an epidemic would break out in the poorer western regions of the country, where it would be contained and isolated easily until it runs its course.

Medical progress and the improved health status of people in general may have kept the lethality of SARS low. But the illness remains extremely infectious. Its mode of transfer has not been fully ascertained, and there is still no cure or vaccine for it. It appears that close contact with an infected person is necessary to its transmission, which is why the known cases are tightly clustered in the same apartment block or hospital ward.

What seems clear is that droplets expelled through sneezing and coughing spread the virus. What is not known yet is how long the microbe can remain active outside of its carrier. Scientists claim it will probably not thrive in the air for more than three hours, and especially not in hot weather conditions. Sufferers have been able to recover from its symptoms quite fast and without any special medication. Of course, those whose health condition makes them vulnerable also die quite quickly. But these same people would likely not survive ordinary pneumonia either. It has been reported that as many as 99 people die of flu in the United States every day. One-third of them suffer from acute respiratory problems. Yet these numbers do not command any special attention. They are part of "normal" health statistics.

What has made SARS special is the panic that the mass media have unwittingly or unwittingly sown around it. First the virulence of the disease was underscored and contrasted against puny efforts to control its spread. Then the secrecy in which the first outbreak in China was enveloped was highlighted, producing suspicions that the number of actual cases could be higher. But SARS' global debut began when it broke out in Hong Kong and Singapore. These two economic centers are vital hubs of the global economy. These are the basic originating points of the large overseas Chinese population. Their airports are the busiest in the Asian region. Their airlines carry passengers to various capitals in the world. Today they are seen as carriers of microbes as well.

In time, the SARS virus will go the way of all epidemics: it will exhaust itself and die with its last victim. A vaccine will be developed against it. A cure will be found. But it will take a while before the fears are erased.

"When people define their situations as real, they will be real in their consequences," said the sociologist W.I. Thomas. Sneezing and coughing inside a plane will be heard from hereon like a fire alarm in a crowded movie house. People will be avoiding air travel for a while. They will be skipping Singapore and Hong Kong and possibly the whole of Southeast Asia in the next few months. Panic will further weaken the fragile economies of the region, and there will be no vaccine for that except a sober mass media.

Sobering effects of SARS crisis

THE DEATH toll from Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome continues to rise. The measures being taken to prevent the disease from spreading seem to be ineffective. Worse, no cure has been found yet for the latest medical scourge to hit the world.

After weeks of enjoying SARS-free status, the Philippines has, with the confirmation of the World Health Organization that Adela Catalon died of SARS, joined the roster of countries affected by that epidemic.

Believed to have started in Guangdong, China, the SARS virus has spread to the so-called First World, or highly developed countries that maintain strict health and hygiene standards. Canada's superior medical expertise and resources have not prevented the epidemic from taking the lives of 14 of its citizens. The United States, United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy and Sweden have confirmed and suspected SARS cases in their midst.

Had the SARS contagion happened two decades ago, medical experts in Western countries would have had a field day flogging the underdeveloped countries (a.k.a. the "Third World") for unhealthy living conditions or failure to take proper measures to limit the effects of the scourge within their territories. The fear that SARS may become the modern version of the bubonic plague has spurred the international community into working together, rather than pointing accusing fingers at each other, to contain its spread and find a treatment for it. And fast before it gets out of control.

For Hong Kong and Singapore, which have to date 105 and 14 SARS-related deaths, respectively, the epidemic has become a humbling experience. These two financial centers have been engaged for years in a contest of one-upmanship involving who has concluded bigger transactions, operated better facilities for global trade and commerce or maintained higher standards of living.

They have flaunted their wealth and financial superiority over their less economically developed neighbors. The condescending attitude subliminally shows in the way they treat migrant workers from those countries who accept jobs that their own citizens are too proud to handle. The Chinese amahs of yesteryears, who were treated like members of the families of their employers, did not suffer the same indignities.

SARS has proven that Hong Kong and Singapore have feet of clay too. Their economies are not as impregnable as their citizens thought or assumed them to be. A nondescript, but deadly, virus has turned Hong Kong's commercial areas (which accounts for at least 40 percent of its economy) into ghost towns. The expatriate bankers who make it possible for international currency to freely flow to and from Hong Kong have returned to their home bases to ride out the epidemic. The former Crown Colony will be lucky if it registers a 2 percent economic growth this year.

The Singaporean government has admitted that its financial projections for 2003 would have to be revised to take into account the drastic drop in economic activities in cargo port operations, investment banking and other commercial activities that the island-nation depends on to remain competitive in the global market.

These two former British colonies probably never expected that, for all their material wealth, they would undergo the financial adversities they once thought reserved for their less gifted neighbors. And in what may be considered an unexpected reversal of fortune, reputable travel agencies have, for health reasons, dropped Hong Kong and Singapore from their priority list.

Forced opening

After SARS, Hong Kong and Singapore will not be the same again. Hopefully, they will have learned important lessons in humility. Nobody lives in ivory towers forever.

The SARS epidemic has also resulted in a dramatic change in China's handling of domestic problems that adversely affect the international community. The world's most populous country is very jealous about its independence. It does not brook interference by other nations in what it considers to be its own internal affairs.

In spite of its active participation in global marketing and financial activities, China has opened its windows just enough to allow the entry of new ideas without sacrificing the authority of the Communist Party to be the principal determinant of the future of its citizens. The "foreigners keep out" sign remains in place although in a different form.

When the People's Liberation Army gunned down the students who gathered at Tiananmen Square in 1989 to seek political reforms, China rejected demands from Western countries to make a truthful accounting of that bloody incident. It chose to suffer the consequences of a US-led trade boycott and cutoff of funding from international lending institutions rather than compromise its right to solve its domestic problems free from foreign interference.

The SARS virus has changed that insular attitude. Breaking from its rigid policies on independent handling of domestic problems and confidentiality of sensitive internal information, China allowed the representatives of the WHO to visit its SARS-stricken areas, including military hospitals which are off limits to civilian officials, to determine the true extent of the epidemic.

Precedent-setting

In addition to letting foreigners advise them on how to limit the adverse effects of the disease, the Chinese leadership, in an effort to placate the international medical community, fired two high-ranking government officials who failed to make a timely and accurate report on SARS before it reached epidemic proportions.

By these actions, China opened a little more its windows to the outside world. It has accepted (although grudgingly) the fact that it cannot reap the benefits of international trade and commerce while continuing to be an opaque and rigid country. If it wants the blessing of economic progress brought about by foreign investments to continue to be enjoyed by its people, it has to give up some centuries-old traditions and beliefs.

Today, China has opened up on domestic medical and health problems. Tomorrow, it may give in to long-standing demands by some nations to discuss a sensitive political issue: human rights. A part of the wall that the Chinese government has built around its people to prevent them from being "contaminated" by dangerous foreign ideas has been chipped away. It took a virus to accomplish that feat.

TALK of the TOWN

Editor Juan V. Sarmiento Jr.

Can the new graduates find jobs?

THE PROSPECTS of employment for fresh college graduates during a SARS outbreak and weak global economy are bleak.

The Commission on Higher Education estimates that some 364,000 students will graduate this year from college.

They will join at least 8.4 million unemployed and underemployed Filipinos in the search for jobs in and outside the country.

Looking for jobs is more difficult this year than the last because SARS has hit the country. The disease is expected to lower the country's economic growth. Already, the tourism and travel industries are reeling from the SARS scare.

The outside world may not offer much relief. The SARS outbreak, the impact of war in Iraq and the sluggishness of developed economies are slowing down growth rates in the region and dimming employment prospects for overseas Filipino workers.

Besides, other countries may put off hiring workers from the Philippines because it is no longer SARS-free.

Jobs in the United States, the world's biggest economy, are also hard to come by. Some 2 million jobs have been lost over the past two years in the United States, which has been in recession since March 2001.

In these hard times, most graduates may not find jobs at all. If they do, the jobs are likely not to be related to their courses.

'I'm afraid to be unemployed'

By Glenda L. Muceros
BA Broadcast Communication Polytechnic University of the Philippines, Manila

I'M very excited to have a job, but I know it won't be easy for me to have one.

Based on the Philippine Labor Force Survey in January 2003, the rate of unemployment is 10.6 percent and underemployment is 16.1 percent. And as before, there are lots of graduates this year, but are there job opportunities? I remember my friend who graduated last year with a major in journalism. She is working as a cashier now. For 11 months she looked for a job related to her field but found none. Rather than stay at home and be unproductive, she decided to be a cashier.

I am afraid to be added to the number of unemployed and unemployed.

So, I decided not to have a vacation after graduation. I decided to apply to different companies as early as now. But sometimes, I thought of applying for a job that is not related to my course, for economic reasons. Besides, underemployed is better than unemployed. I am open to the fact that many graduating mass communication students will not be hired by the TV networks, radio stations and newspapers.

A classmate of mine told me that she was not closing the door to the possibility of working abroad even as a domestic helper. I can't blame her because of the stories we heard from the graduates last year. Especially now that some foreign investors are pulling out of the country. Many companies also have closed shop.

'Some UP graduates work in call centers'

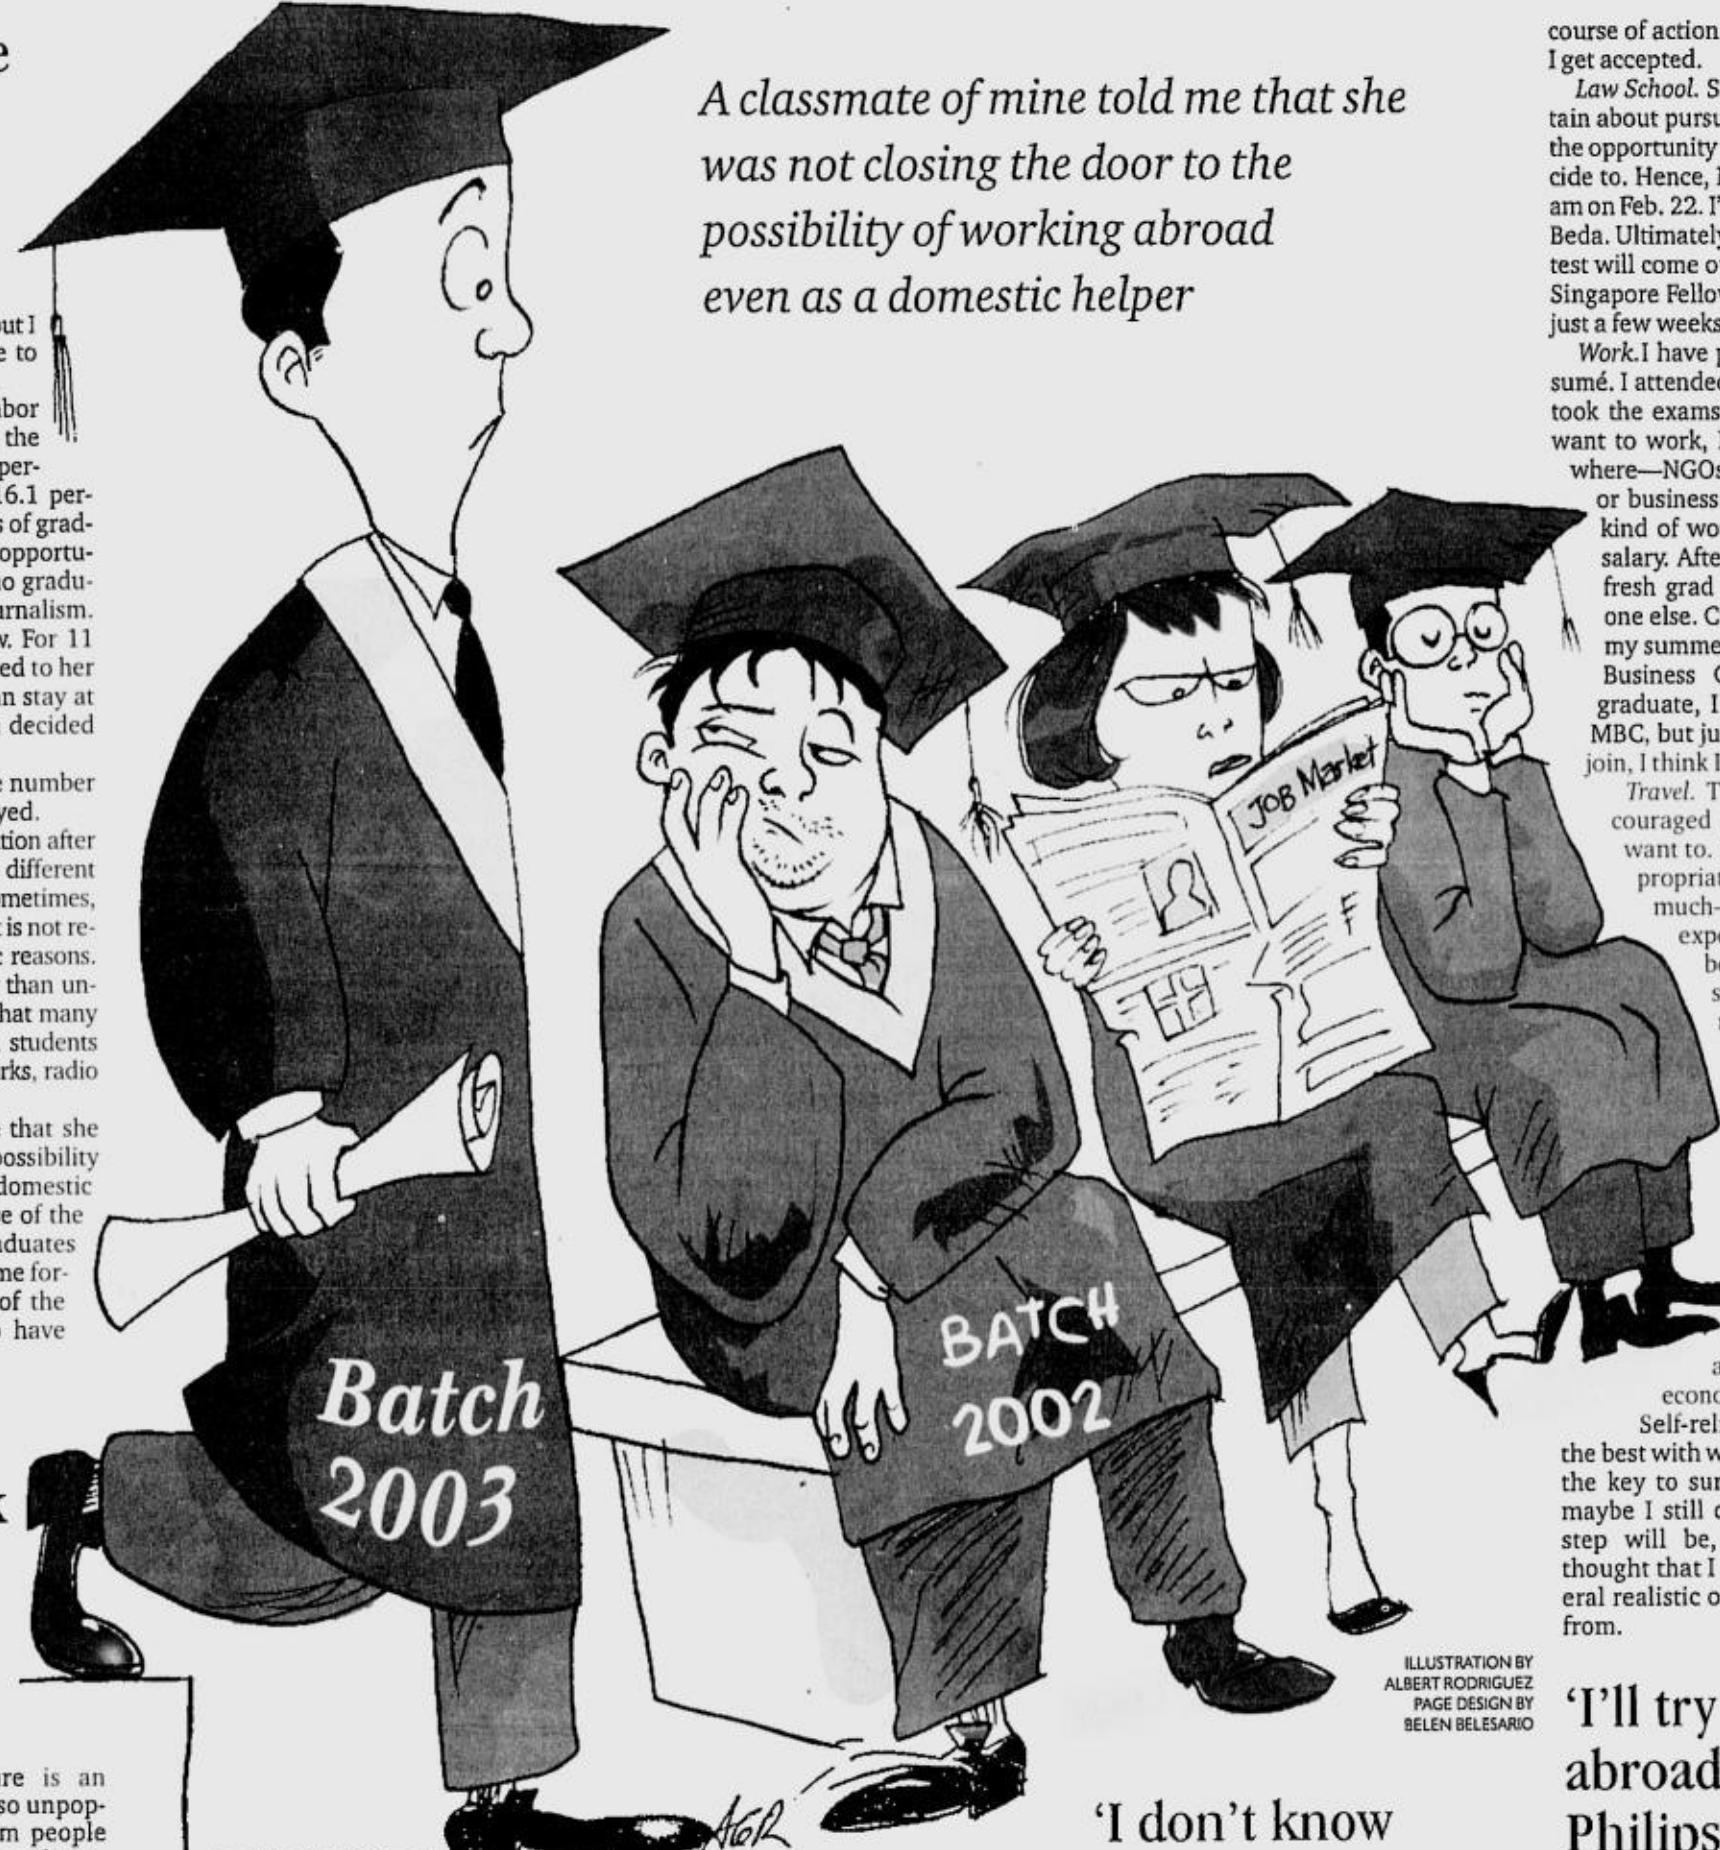

By Kristine L. Alave
BA Comparative Literature
University of the Philippines,
Quezon City

COMPARATIVE Literature is an unpopular course. It is so unpopular that when I inform people about my major, their automatic response is "What is that? What do you do?" There are only a dozen or so CL majors in my batch. Many of my freshmen blockmates shifted to other courses like economics, business administration and psychology come sophomore year, perhaps realizing that knowledge of literary theories seldom pays the bills. (The low student population is common among humanities courses. Many students are lured by information technology-related courses, which are deemed more lucrative, thanks to the proliferation of computer schools and the government's hype.)

There are jobs available for CL graduates, though. One can apply for a position in advertising, but it's difficult to get accepted. A CL graduate is up against a sea of graduates from advertising, marketing, commerce, mass communication, etc. who spent four years grooming themselves for the same position. Teaching is another option. But because a CL graduate is ill-equipped to face the problems of teaching high school students, it is imperative that one get some teaching units. Working for magazines, publishing houses and newspapers is another plan, but notices for jobs in these fields are few. I was scanning the INQUIRER classified ads last weekend and only saw two ads for editors.

Because literature graduates are not high on companies' preference lists, going straight to graduate school and then applying for a teaching position is a popular option. But the promise of tenure is hard to come by, especially in the University of the Philippines whose budget this year is again slashed. Moreover, a UP salary is measly compared to other universities. A professor of mine once remarked that raising a family on a UP salary alone was impossible. Law school is another promising option and course of action at the moment, provided I get accepted.

Law School. Since I am not entirely certain about pursuing law, I wanted to keep the opportunity available just in case I decide to. Hence, I took the Ateneo Law Exam on Feb. 22. I'm still thinking about San Beda. Ultimately, the results of the Ateneo test will come out at the same time as the Singapore Fellowship—early or mid-May, just a few weeks before I graduate.

Work. I have prepared copies of my resume. I attended some job interviews and took the exams. If asked where I would want to work, I would have to say anywhere—NGOs, educational institutions or business. I am not picky with the kind of work nor do I expect a high salary. After all, I'm just an ordinary fresh grad competing against everyone else. Currently, my mindset is on my summer internship in the Makati Business Club. Hopefully when I graduate, I may be absorbed by the MBC, but just in case I'm not asked to join, I think I will find a job eventually.

Travel. Though my family has encouraged me to travel, I would not want to. I don't think this is the appropriate time to spend so much—things are getting more expensive, the economy has been weak. I would rather save the money. Another reason is the timing. Sept. 11 and SARS are not exactly what would make travel an easy choice.

These are the times that greatly challenge the 2003 graduates. You name it, and it's practically there: national and international constraints such as illnesses and red tape, and domestic, political and economic problems.

Self-reliance and initiative to do the best with what you have is, therefore, the key to survive the "real world." So maybe I still don't know what my next step will be, but it is a comforting thought that I have made for myself several realistic options that I could choose from.

'I'll try my luck abroad after Philips'

By Ma. Evigene Bañez
Electronics and Communications
Engineering
University of Santo Tomas, Manila

IHAVEN'T applied for a job with any company. I graduated on March 29, 2003 and luckily have a Philips Semiconductors Scholarship. The company has plans for its scholars. By June, all of their newly graduated scholars will take a semiconductor diploma course at the University of the Philippines in Los Baños while getting a monthly stipend.

After six months of studying, the scholars will be trained inside the company's plant at the Light Industries and Science Park 2 in Calamba, Laguna, and again will be provided with monthly stipend. The company may, or may not absorb us after this. Whoa! I guess most of you will think how lucky we are but this arrangement benefits both parties; they get who they think are the cream of the crop from different schools and let them work for the company at a reasonable amount of compensation while the scholars enjoy the benefit of having a job after graduation.

I just wish that the semiconductors industry would not take a fall, like that in 2000, or else these plans will not push through. Some would think that this is a rare opportunity to have a great job under a great company right after graduation, but I can say that this is not purely luck. Everything is a product of determination, patience, hard work and other values that come with it.

As of now, I plan to honor my contract with the company and then go out of the country and try my luck abroad where I plan to have my own family.

'I dream of having my own computer business'

By Ma. Pamela E. Parpan
BS Computer Science
De La Salle-Araneta University, Malabon

I AM both eager and scared of what the future holds for me. Eager, because I want to make my family proud of me, and because I want to earn a decent living and establish a name for myself. Scared, because of the difficulties and uncertainties of life.

Before I finished college, I knew that I would not get a job easily. Most of my schoolmates are now working but not with a job related to the course they had taken. This summer, I am planning to apply for a job related to my degree. If I'm not lucky I'd probably just stay at home and wait for opportunities.

As we all know, opportunities in the country are limited. So maybe most of us will be seeking our fortunes and our future abroad. Obviously, our country is facing a lot of crises. Competition is stiff and the work demands are always evolving. We must strive to equip ourselves with new knowledge and to learn new skills.

Nowadays, it is difficult to make a career that lasts one's lifetime. More often than not, people have several careers in their lifetime. In other words, we need to learn to think like a generalist and acquire all the skills that it entails. I myself need to "perfect" my skills in writing, speaking, time management, planning and budgeting. Most of the companies today look for independent and disciplined individuals who are dedicated and driven.

I hope to get a job soon so that I can help my family. I also dream of having my own computer business of any kind as long as it is legal. I may not have a job now, but I know that someday, I hope I'll be the one choosing what job to take.

'I don't know what my next step will be'

By Ricardo Victor K. Ramos
BA Political Economy
University of Asia & the Pacific
Pasig City

AS my studies in Political Economy are about to draw to a close, I have to see what my next step will be. I have several options, namely pursue foreign studies, study law, start working somewhere, or engage in travel. But before delving into these options, I realized that my perception of the world has changed, making me well-equipped and realistic in my approach.

The university, specifically my course, Political Economy, has made me more aware of what the real world is. When I was in high school, my worldview was simple: my family and friends, school, night outs and travel—a pretty limited and comfortable perspective, I admit. But upon entering the university, I explored other fields that expanded my world. Political Economy, thanks to the rigorous training, forced me to be diligent and resourceful. It made me question everything taught or said. And because Political Economy integrates politics and economics, it gave me a holistic perspective on things, making me flexible in pursuing practically any profession.

Foreign Study. Seeing that there are few job opportunities, I applied for a fellowship program in Singapore. This five-month program may allow me to make productive use of my time, while building some credentials. However, thanks to SARS, I don't think this would be the best

Civilians killed in Iraqi ammo dump explosion

ZAAFARANIYA, Iraq—Many Iraqi civilians were believed killed on Saturday when an arms dump blew up on the outskirts of Baghdad, sending rockets flying into houses and sparking a string of further explosions.

With shrapnel, live ammunition and unexploded rockets strewn over a wide area, the precise extent of the damage and casualties was far from clear. One Iraqi medic put the death toll at 40; US Central Command said only that at least six had been killed.

There was also confusion over the cause of the blast, which the US military blamed on unidentified attackers who had fired a flare or incendiary device into the store of Iraqi ammunition.

Local residents said US forces had been packing cars with Iraqi weapons over the last three days and detonating them at the site, but a US officer, Col. John Peabody, denied this.

A local medic travelling in an Iraqi ambulance ferrying casualties to a hospital said there had been many victims.

Asked how many were killed, he replied: "Forty."

The head doctor at Zaafraniya hospital, Shaker Nasser, said his unit had received six dead and 13 wounded, adding that other hospitals in the capital were also taking casualties.

Some soldiers were also wounded, US

Army sergeant-major said at Zaafraniya, a mixed residential and industrial suburb on the southern edge of the capital.

In Washington, the United States said Friday it will not allow a pro-Iranian regime into Iraq as US forces nabbed a former Iraqi intelligence official linked to an alleged plot to assassinate former president George Bush.

US Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld strongly warned Tehran against interfering in Iraq, echoing mounting US concerns that Iran was using Iraq's majority Shiite community to try to replace Saddam Hussein's regime with an Iranian-style Islamic republic.

"A vocal minority claiming to transform Iraq in Iran will not be permitted to do so," Rumsfeld said.

"We will not allow the Iraqi people's democratic transition to be hijacked by those who might wish to install another form of dictatorship."

US Marines and special forces were sent this week to northeastern Iraq to patrol the border with Iran and prevent infiltrations by Iranian-backed fighters.

Iran has angrily rejected US allegations of "interference" in Iraq.

In Baghdad, meanwhile, a member of Iraq's Shiite Muslim clergy spelled out the conditions for the future government and constitution in Iraq, saying the ruler should be a Muslim and the laws in line with Islam.

US wants to remove UN hold on Iraq oil

UNITED NATIONS—Security Council members next week face a contentious struggle over US demands to get the United Nations out of the multibillion-dollar Iraqi oil-for-food plan and give it only a peripheral role in shaping a new government.

According to Bush administration officials, the United States will introduce a resolution in the council that lifts sanctions against Iraq and calls for a special UN coordinator in what appears to be a low-level consultative role.

In the main, the resolution would end UN control over the lucrative oil-for-food program. Currently Iraq's oil revenues go into a UN escrow fund from which suppliers of food, medicine and a host of civilian goods are paid.

The new measure, according to UN diplomats familiar with the US proposal, would create a development fund with oil revenues and give the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund some oversight duties.

Council diplomats said the main point of contention would be the relationship between any Iraqi interim authority, the United Nations and the United States and its allies.

"At the moment it is weighted heavily in favor of the coalition," said one envoy. The diplomat said the draft resolution, first disclosed by the Washington Post, appeared to be an opening ploy and would probably be whittled down once negotiations began.

Without Security Council endorsement, oil firms are hesitant to sign contracts with an entity that has no international legal standing.

The oil-for-food program was designed to ease the impact of the sanctions, imposed in August 1990 when Iraq invaded Kuwait.

Among the terms for lifting the sanctions, which include all trade and financial dealings, are verification by UN arms inspectors that Iraq has no weapons of mass destruction.

Benon Sevan, the UN official who heads the complex program, said on Friday that the food basket distributed by 44,000 food agents to 90 percent of the population before the war needed to be resumed, if only temporarily.

"Whoever is going to be in charge has to find a way to have that food basket continue," he told a news conference.

One 1999 council resolution even calls for ongoing monitoring by UN inspection bodies after the sanctions are lifted to make sure

Iraq does not reacquire dangerous arms.

But the United States does not want the UN inspectors back, blaming them for not coming up with a "smoking gun" that would have given ammunition to its war plans.

Doing away quickly with 16 resolutions the United States helped craft over the last decade is bound to engender opposition among a majority of council members and force Britain again into the role of seeking a compromise.

Adolfo Aguilar Zinser, Mexico's UN ambassador and the current council president, said on Thursday most members did not want the oil-for-food program stopped abruptly.

"We feel that it should be phased out gradually because we cannot terminate a program that has such significance for such a large proportion of the population," he told reporters.

The proposed resolution, still being drafted, appears to adopt the Pentagon's approach for an omnibus measure that would eliminate most UN controls immediately rather than the State Department's step-by-step approach.

The US measure would also ask UN Secretary General Kofi Annan to appoint a special coordinator, who would work with American officials in Baghdad but apparently have little power beyond humanitarian issues.

Annan so far has refused American requests to do this, arguing that the Security Council would have to make a decision and Washington would have to spell out clearly what the envoy would do. Reuters

SHORT OF VICTORY DECLARATION

Bush may soon announce combat over in Iraq

WASHINGTON—President George W. Bush may declare combat in Iraq over next week, even as US troops still hunt evidence of Saddam Hussein's banned weapons and seek clues to the ousted leader's fate, aides said Friday.

Bush has increasingly justified the war on Iraq, which he hinged on Saddam's possession of weapons of mass destruction, on liberating its people, even as he and top aides say the regime may have preemptively destroyed its arsenal.

"Perhaps over time we will find out what drove them to do that. Perhaps it was the fear of actually being discovered, caught red-handed with the very weapons we said they had," said White House spokesperson Ari Fleischer.

As clashes in Iraq become ever more sporadic, Bush may use a rare visit next Thursday to an aircraft carrier at sea, the USS Abraham Lincoln, to say the fighting is over but will stop short of declaring victory outright because key missions remain, said administration officials, who requested anonymity.

One reason for caution is that Bush sees a global picture still rife with challenges—like setting Iraq on course for democracy and winning the global war on terrorism—which make declaring victory premature, they said.

The US leader's speech will look beyond the military triumph in Iraq to those other efforts, said the officials, who refused to say precisely when Bush would speak but acknowledged that the carrier would be an ideal venue.

Bush remains confident that US-led forces scouring Iraq will find evidence of the weapons programs he placed at the core of his case for war, even though Baghdad always denied having them, said administration officials.

And he has repeatedly said that Saddam, whatever his fate since the war began March 19, is now irrelevant to Iraq's future, even as US forces seek to verify "some evidence" that the ousted leader was killed.

Fleischer said Friday that, "at the appropriate time," Bush will say "that the combat phase of the operation has come to a conclusion and that a new phase, the reconstruction of freedom, is beginning."

The US leader has repeatedly said he will only declare that the war is over when he hears that determination from the commander of US forces in the region, Gen. Tommy Franks.

US military options for N. Korea risky

WASHINGTON—US officials say they want a diplomatic solution to the North Korea crisis but refuse to rule out military action, with analysts on Friday pointing to options such as air strikes on nuclear facilities, a naval blockade or an invasion using troops already in the region.

But military experts said any military option is fraught with peril because of North Korea's military capabilities—including its admitted possession of nuclear arms and its thousands of artillery guns within range of the South Korean capital Seoul—and the erratic nature of its leadership.

"It's very difficult to assess the value of various military options that the United States has because although we can know their feasibility, we can't know the North Korean response," said analyst Loren Thompson of the Lexington Institute military think tank.

"North Korea is so impulsive and so unpredictable that logic may not apply. Relatively modest measures may bring catastrophic results. It's conceivable that even a naval blockade could result in a nuclear attack by North Korea on South Korea," Thompson added.

Center for Strategic and International Studies analyst Anthony Cordesman added: "The plain truth of the matter is you are talking about a massive theater war against a power which has a very clear historical record of being able to take immense casualties and absorb immense damage to its civil sector with almost no concern for the consequences."

During talks among American, Chinese and North Korean officials in Beijing this week, North Korea admitted that it possessed nuclear weapons. US officials worry North Korea also could produce nuclear material to make more bombs and sell them to enemies of the United States.

A defense official who asked not to be named said, "We hope and believe we can achieve a peaceful diplomatic solution but we're not going to take any options off the table."

With stealth warplanes and satellite-guided weapons, the United States is uniquely capable of staging a limited strike intended to destroy North Korea's nuclear facilities such as those at the Yongbyon nuclear reactor site, analysts said.

A historical precedent for such a mission is the June 7, 1981, air strike by Israel on a nuclear facility near Baghdad aimed at denying Iraq the ability to make nuclear weapons.

Patrick Garrett, an analyst with the GlobalSecurity.org military think tank, said the warplanes for such an attack might include the B-2 stealth bomber, flying from Whiteman Air Force Base in Missouri, as well as B-1 and B-52 heavy bombers and the F-117 stealth fighter already in the region.

But Garrett said even an attack narrowly tailored to knock out North Korea's nuclear weapons capability likely would include air strikes intended to neutralize at least 3,000 artillery pieces arrayed a north of the Demilitarized Zone separating North Korea from South Korea.

Garrett said air strikes alone might not destroy North Korean military assets carved deeply into the sides or beneath mountains. Some artillery pieces emerge from protection inside the mountains on rail tracks, ready to fire on Seoul, he said.

Russia launches first space flight after Columbia crash

BAIKONUR, Kazakhstan—A US and a Russian astronaut blasted off Saturday from the Baikonur cosmodrome in Kazakhstan on the first space flight since the Columbia shuttle disaster three months ago.

The Russian Soyuz TMA-2 rocket, carrying Russian flight commander Yury Malenchenko and US flight engineer Edward Lu, lifted off at 0354 GMT and is due to dock with the International Space Station early Monday.

All US space missions have been grounded since the Columbia shuttle disintegrated and burnt up on entry, killing all seven crew members, on Feb. 1, making Russia the only link with the 16-nation orbital station.

The Soyuz rocket tore up into the sky in a burst of orange giving off clouds of smoke.

Clapping erupted but Lu's brother Rick and fiancee Christine waited tensely as they watched the US cosmonaut on a TV screen as a countdown began toward orbit.

They looked anxiously on as the screen went fuzzy at one point and the image went off.

But nearly nine minutes into the flight, there were smiles of relief and loud clapping as it was announced that the craft had successfully reached orbit. "Oh, boy!" exclaimed Rick.

"It's ecstatic," said Christine. "I'm so relieved after that last stage. I was holding my breath. It's my first launch. The relief is overwhelming." "We're so happy for him. He was so excited about the launch," said Rick. Lu's mother watched the liftoff from mission control in Moscow.

Some three hours into the flight, the crew prepared for the first engine-firing to correct their orbit and reported that all was fine onboard. NASA officials in Baikonur said after contact with Russian ground control.

Fred Gregory, deputy NASA administrator, who was present along with other top US and Russian space officials, including Russian Space Agency chief Yuri Koptev, paid tribute to the Russians.

Washington 'murder capital' again

WASHINGTON—A surge in murders in the US capital heralds a return to the bad old days of the 1980s when Washington was known as America's "murder capital," local activists said on Friday.

But officials fighting to promote a cleaner, safer image of the city and keep the vital tourist industry afloat amid vague new terrorist threats sought to allay fears, as analysts noted the figures were still far below a 1991 peak.

"Washington, DC, had the highest number of homicides per capita in 2002 of cities with populations of 500,000 or more, making the District again the nation's 'murder capital,'" the report by SafeStreetsDC.com said.

Washington had 262 slayings last year, compared to 658 murders in Los Angeles. But that translated to 48.5 killings per 100,000 people, versus 17.5 in Los Angeles.

Some activists blame the diversion of the local police force to antiterrorism duties downtown for the murder rise.

Criminologists suggest it may also be linked to a rise in drug-related killings and a downturn in the economy.

Using FBI and local police department homicide data, SafeStreetsDC said Detroit, Baltimore, Memphis and Chicago completed the roster of the five most murderous US cities.

A SafeStreetsDC spokesperson said the group had not reviewed earlier data to pinpoint when the capital last held the title.

The city's number of annual killings peaked in 1991 at 482 on the heels of a crack cocaine epidemic and fell almost every year thereafter until it reached 233 in 2001, said James Alan Fox, professor of Criminal Justice at Northeastern University.

Murders so far this year in the US capital total 79, up 22 percent from last year, but criminologists cautioned that the statistics did not give the full story of the 1990s.

"The numbers are much better than they were a decade ago when Washington DC was way out in front, when it was so far above number two that there was no comparison," said Fox.

New kidney, new life for Abadilla 5 death convict confined at the NIKI because he had end-stage renal failure.

Since that time until the transplant, a number of ordinary people had donated money for his medication and twice-weekly dialysis. Those unable to give him anything material offered prayers. And the "running priest," Fr. Robert Reyes, spearheaded a fund-raising campaign last December.

Lumanog's family could not afford to shoulder the costs of medication, dialysis and transplant surgery because Lumanog, following his conviction by a Quezon City Regional Trial Court in 1999, had lost all his businesses.

Recuperation

Lumanog is now able to move around. By tomorrow, all the contraptions attached to his body will be removed, Casanova said.

Marilou, who is scheduled to be discharged from the hospital today, said she was feeling OK although a bit dizzy from the anesthesia.

She said her husband had recovered faster from surgery than she did. "It took a while before I could regain my bearings," she said in Filipino.

The surgery may be over, but that is not the end to Lumanog's worries.

The first seven days after a transplant operation are crucial to the patient because this is the time when his/her body has to recuperate.

Casanova said that after the surgery, Lumanog was given two injections (costing more than P176,000) that would prevent his body from rejecting the donated kidney.

The next three months will be a constant battle against infection, the doctor said.

During this period, Lumanog has to take medicines costing up to P1,000 a day.

And for the rest of his life, he has to take another set of medicines costing up to P500 a day.

Because the medications he is taking are intended to lower his immunity so his body will not reject the donated kidney, Lumanog is vulnerable to any type of infection.

He cannot stay in crowded places and needs to live in a clean environment, Casanova said.

Both Casanova and Dr. Erwin Villar, Lumanog's nephrologist, are set to issue a certification that the patient needs to stay in a place where he is not exposed to germs.

Another crucial battle

Although his health is his first priority, Lumanog—as well as the rest of the Abadilla 5—has another crucial battle he intends to win: an acquittal.

The case is now before the Supreme Court on automatic review.

But Lumanog, through his lawyer Soliman Santos, is not just interested in getting an acquittal. He wants the tribunal to order the QC Regional Trial Court to reopen the case so he can present more evidence that it was the Alex Boncayao Brigade that killed Abadilla.

The tribunal had earlier rejected this motion to reopen the case. Last November, a motion for reconsideration was filed.

Lumanog is also pushing for a reinvestigation by the justice department of the human rights violations case against the police officers who allegedly tortured him and his co-accused while they were investigating Abadilla's killing in 1996.

That case languished at the justice department for six years before state prosecutors declared in 2002 that they could no longer act on the complaint forwarded by the Commission on Human Rights.

The prosecutors said their doing so would mean touching the Abadilla 5's death penalty case on automatic review before the Supreme Court. It would be a violation of the sub judice rule, they said.

Last January, however, then acting Justice Secretary Merceditas Gutierrez overturned this ruling and ordered a reopening of the case.

As of last week, the reinvestigation is still in its preliminary stage.

But Lumanog is hopeful that with the surgery done, he can pay more attention to the case.

The death convict is eagerly awaiting the opportunity to clear his name—now the only legacy he can give his children.

DOING fine: Kidney transplant patient Lenido Lumanog recuperating at the National Kidney Institute is grateful for his new lease on life through the kindness of many especially Mr. Mike Arroyo.

The high arrivals in January and February had managed to offset the 9.5-percent drop in March, he said.

Gordon said the DOT remained aggressive in promoting Philippine tourism in countries where there are still no SARS cases like Germany.

SARS reports drive people to panic

PEOPLE in the provinces are being driven to the edge of panic by numerous reports, most of them unconfirmed, of persons getting infected by the virus that causes Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS).

In Central Luzon, the mere suspicion of the presence of SARS triggers panic reaction.

Dr. Ethelyn Nieto, regional head of the health department, had a first hand experience with the panic that mere suspicion could create.

She broke off from the inauguration of a birthing station in Moncada, Tarlac to take a call from Olongapo City Vice Mayor Cynthia Cajudo regarding a Taiwanese locked up at home at the Subic Bay Freeport with cough and high fever.

But no doctor would attend to the Taiwanese, forcing Nieto to call a Bataan hospital to seek help and endorse the Taiwanese to the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine (RITM) or the San Lazaro Hospital in Manila.

Nieto said she was shocked at the impact that her call to the hospital made.

"Doctors and nurses here are crying because a SARS suspect would be taken to Bataan," Nieto recalled being told on the telephone.

"But he is only a suspected SARS patient. If you will react like that, it's better that all of you resign," Nieto recalled saying in reply.

Nieto was forced to ask the head of the Jose Lingad Memorial Hospital in San Fernando City to send a doctor and an ambulance to Subic, check on the patient and endorse him to the RITM or San Lazaro.

Deadly panic

As she addressed health workers and public officials in Moncada, Nieto said that more than the virus, "it is panic that will kill us."

"Do not panic, take a look at the clinical history of the patient. We should be very cautious but at the same time exercise diligence in looking at suspected or probable SARS patients. The suspected SARS patient is the first to be made to wear a mask," she said.

Nieto said cases of local transmission are the key in determining if an area is SARS-free.

"You can declare an area SARS-free until no local transmission occurs," she said.

She cited the case of Barangay Vacante in Alcala, Pangasinan, the home village of SARS victims Adela Catalon and her father Mauricio.

"If nothing happens until (Saturday), the last day of the incubation period, if nobody gets SARS, then it (Barangay Vacante) will be declared SARS-free," Nieto said.

Tarlac Rep. Gilberto Teodoro Jr. said aside from panic, rumor-mongers contribute to the misinformation about SARS. "Rumor-mongers should be punished as we should not toy with the issue at a time like this," he said.

Ricardo Ramos, Tarlac health director, said the SARS experience is a wake up call for Filipinos.

Wake-up call

"It is a call to go back to the basics of personal health care—proper nutrition, a healthy lifestyle and personal hygiene," he said.

In Nueva Ecija, rumors spread by text messages in Cabanatuan City, Science City of Muñoz and San Antonio town have created panic in the province.

"This is causing problems," Dr. Annette de Guzman-Bautista, president of the Nueva Ecija Medical Society (NEMS), said. "The truth is that we have no SARS-affected persons in the province."

The Nueva Ecija health office said the Filipino-Canadian boy in San Antonio, Nueva Ecija, who was examined at the RITM, was cleared by doctors.

In Pangasinan, residents of a village in Mangaldan town panicked after an overseas Filipino worker went down with high fever days after her arrival from Hong Kong.

A resident said the OFW arrived April 6 and started to have fever on April 10. But doctors at the Region 1 Medical Center said the OFW suffered from urinary tract infection (UTI), not SARS.

The homecoming of a domestic helper from Hong Kong, a native of Tambulig, Zamboanga del Sur, turned out to be a publicly heralded event in Ozamis City Saturday morning because of the SARS scare.

The domestic helper went home after her employer in Hong Kong went jobless and could not pay her wages anymore.

The ship that was carrying the woman was kept from docking for hours until health teams had examined the suspected SARS carrier.

Rumor source

The rumors first spread in Tambulig, where townsfolk had been expressing alarm over the woman's homecoming.

After the tests were made and the ship was cleared to dock, 997 passengers, mostly wearing protective covers such as hankies, towels and whatever they could use to cover their faces, streamed out of the vessel.

Many of the passengers were alarmed when they learned they would be delayed because of a probable SARS case.

A member of the health team said the woman's body temperature at the time of the test was 37.3 degrees Celsius, very much lower than the indicative body temperature of a probable SARS patient of over 38 degrees.

But the health personnel advised the woman to voluntary isolate herself for seven to 10 days, after which she should seek medical attention to properly evaluate her condition.

In the event the woman manifests SARS symptoms, the team said they would invite those who came in close contact with her, primarily those whose beds are near hers, to medical tests.

The woman's mother who came to fetch her daughter, was overwhelmed by the attention her virtually unknown family suddenly got.

But she admitted that back in Tambulig town, she had minor altercations with some neighbors, who expressed alarm over reports that her daughter was carrying the SARS virus.

The mother said before her daughter left for home, rural health unit personnel told her to isolate her daughter to make sure she doesn't spread the SARS virus if ever she carried it.

Residents used barrels to block the national highway leading to the hospital where the woman was supposed to be taken.

Placards

The residents carried placards with the message: "SARS no entry!"

In General Santos City, persons showing SARS-like symptoms were told not to go directly to clinics or hospitals to avoid spreading the virus.

Dr. Fidel Penamante, city health officer, said possible SARS patients should wait for medical teams at home.

"Our foremost concern here is to prevent the spread of the virus," he said.

In Cotabato City, health authorities said they could not probably handle SARS cases.

In Negros Oriental, doctors are grappling with whether to treat or not persons infected with SARS.

"We are not psychologically ready. We are trying to prepare scientifically but we always have that feeling of self-preservation especially if you're a married person," said Dr. Walden Ursos, an internist at the Silliman Medical Center (SMC).

"We're also concerned about our family. For me, it's going to be a personal decision, which I will have to make when the patient is there," said Ursos, chair of the hospital's infection control committee.

In a media briefing on the hospital's preparations for SARS, Ursos said hospital personnel have been directed to wear masks at all times, even as Negros Oriental remains SARS-free.

"We are just preparing for the fear of the unknown, even as this might be misinterpreted by some to mean that SARS is already in Dumaguete. But we are just trying to be prepared, in response to the request of the Department of Health. This will be our first line of defense," he said.

Dr. Gloria Ibalio, medical director of the Holy Child Hospital, admitted on Friday that they were not equipped to handle SARS cases and any SARS patient would be sent to Manila.

At the Negros Oriental Provincial Hospital, Dr. Virgilio Sienes said the province has an isolation ward and the hospital is still not prepared for SARS. Reports from Alex Pal and Carla Gomez, PDI Visayas Bureau; Ryan Rosauro with Aquiles Zonio and Edwin Fernandez, PDI Mindanao Bureau and Jo Clemente, Anselmo Roque and Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk and Volan da Sotelo-Puerte, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

The passion of Lanao's Cebuano writers

By Christine Godinez-Ortega
Iligan City

A PASSIONATE patience at mastering craft through imitation and experience, and the ability to strike a balance between literary art and popular culture have been the lifetime concerns of Lanao's writers in Cebuano.

They may not be considered mainstream, nor will they ever be lionized by Manila's tri-media due to ignorance and indifference, but still their achievements cannot be underestimated. One day, when all of their works have been collected to contribute to the poetics on vernacular literature, Filipinos will have a better appreciation of the writers' staying power in the context of shifting language policies and the few publishing outlets available to them, such as the Bisaya Magazine founded by Ramon Roces in 1930.

With pride, the writers, who are in their 60s and 70s, brought with them for the interview copies of their early and latest works. One of them opened a family album containing news clippings and photos taken during writing awards.

them, Penaserada kept this story until the call for entries for the Palanca came two years ago. Submitting the same story in its original title, it won first prize in the prestigious contest.

Hynson

A barber and retired government employee-turned-novelist, Ricardo M. Hynson, 69, learned about the craft from English and American writers, and from one of his barber shop customers, Gumersindo Rafanan.

Hynson had his share of "numerous rejection slips," for although he knew his Cebuano well, he lacked the technical skill in writing fiction.

Like Penaserada, Rafanan and Marcelo Geocallo, Hynson did not go to writers' workshops because at that time, there were nothing of the kind. He continued to write publishing his first short story, "Ang Bulak," in Bisaya in 1958.

But again, Hynson learned one more lesson from an editor of the Bisaya who told him to avoid "mechanical endings," referring to his short story, "Haring Lawaan," inspired by Hemingway's "Old Man and the Sea." Hynson used as metaphor the struggles between man and the octopus, with the octopus winning over man. The significance must have been missed by the editor because he asked Hynson "to make man win" instead.

must go through other "agonies" besides sleeping on a sacred mountain.

Rafanan

Among the four Cebuano writers from Lanao, Gumersindo M. Rafanan, 62, is a poet and fictionist writing in Cebuano, Tagalog and English. To date, he has authored 25 novels in Cebuano, most of them in serial form, either in print or illustrated in the comics section of Bisaya.

His latest novel, "Ang Gikalisan sa Pantao Ragat," came out in 94 installments in Bisaya at P250 per issue, surely a pittance in comparison to the demands of writing a novel but an improvement since 1953 when, according to Rafanan, the going rate for the short story was P25 in the Bisaya and P40 in the Liwayway.

From this Ludabi and Bathalad-Mindanao Hall of Famer, winning to date a total of 71 prizes for his fiction and poetry, including the Cultural Center of the Philippines' grant in 1994 for his Tagalog translation of Sulpicio Osorio's novel, "Mga Bungsod Nga Gipangguba," Rafanan has developed a perfect understanding of moment and milieu, writing for his audience topical, realistic and "conversational" stories.

"Why make [poetry or stories] difficult?" he asks. In his experience and in his study of the literary styles of writers in popular magazines that publish Cebuano fiction and poetry, he has learned that if the work is "too literary," readers won't read them because "they are not really educated."

As a former English major and retired government auditor, Rafanan, like Penaserada, has been called by scholar Resil Mojares "a most competent writer" in Cebuano.

Early in his writing career, Rafanan had picked up writing techniques from English and American models. But his fierce devotion to writing in Cebuano is legend.

In an emotional appeal "to love one's own language and culture" during the recent "Balaki ko day" literary readings at the St. Michael's College in Iligan City, which was sponsored by the National Commission for Culture and the Arts, Rafanan challenged his audience to take a hard look at themselves, at where they come from, and to take pride in their own language, echoing the sentiments expressed long ago by then President Carlos P. Garcia, who was also a poet.

Geocallo

Like the other three writers, Marcelo A. Geocallo, 63, need not kiss the hem of a muse's gown to make him write.

Saying that he types away without ritual or ceremony, Geocallo said, matter-of-factly, "I write anytime and anywhere." Settling comfortably in his chair, he told everyone in the room that writing for him has never been such fun.

Using alternately the pen names, Gerónimo A. Molave, Ram Sanari and Juanario Díez Saez, Geocallo is also a Ludabi and Bathalad Hall of Famer, having won five prizes for fiction, five first prizes for poetry and citations for essays and radio scripts.

This writing machine has written a total of 200 poems, 200 short stories and 12 novels, and has produced radio scripts every week for 12 months during his brief stint with Iligan's radio station dxIC.

Aside from being prolific, Geocallo is the most anthologized in the group. His works appeared in the Kalirin, Wagas, Sanggi and the Cebuano Poetry/Sugboanong Balak and Panulaang Cebuano published by the Ateneo de Manila University Press in 1993.

One day when all of their works have been collected... Filipinos will have a better appreciation of the writers' staying power...

SARS downs another Pinoy in HK

By Cherry Velarde
Contributor

HONG KONG—Another Filipino was confirmed to have contracted Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), Philippine Consul General Victoria Bataclan said on Friday.

The latest victim is a female domestic helper now confined at the Queen Elizabeth Hospital in Kowloon district. She was brought there for treatment last April 16 and is now in "stable condition," Bataclan said.

The latest case brings the total number of Filipinos in Hong Kong with SARS to nine, including one death. Five have recovered from the deadly disease and have been discharged from the hospital.

In view of the rising cases among Filipinos, the consulate is boosting its education campaigns within the Filipino community in Hong Kong and implementing stricter measures to control the spread of the disease. Bataclan once more urged Filipino domestic helpers to avoid huge social gatherings, including their traditional assemblies during their day off, usually on Sundays.

Bataclan said the consulate continues to check on the conditions of Filipinos living in SARS-infected buildings. There are 127 office and apartment buildings, schools and hospitals around Hong Kong that have been categorized by the Hong Kong government as SARS-infected.

Bataclan has also mobilized leaders of the Filipino community to help in monitoring and reporting SARS cases in their groups.

Jet-setting FVR passes tests

BAGUIO CITY—The man who possibly holds the record in the country for the highest frequent flyer mileage had to undergo a series of SARS tests at the Baguio Country Club (BCC) here on Friday where he attended the annual assembly of the Semiconductor and Electronics Industries in the Philippines Inc. (Seipi).

For former President Fidel Ramos, the SARS test is not the first drawback in his self-proclaimed role as the Philippines elder statesman. During a recent Chicago trip, Ramos said he was actually profiled as a potential terrorist and was led away by US airport officials for mandatory questioning.

The US government started profiling foreigners, either by computer or by trained airline experts, following the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks in New York City and Washington.

"My name came up and I was frisked, but let us not belabor this anymore. This is part of the hazards of being the country's statesman," Ramos said.

He said traveling afforded him the best opportunity to sell the potentials of the Philippines. But with the government's admission that the country is no longer SARS-free, foreign countries Ramos routinely visits could apply even stricter entry procedures.

rectly into their mouths as is customary.

The cardinal also appealed to Catholics to storm the heavens with special prayers normally said in times of "calamities and inexplicable natural catastrophes."

Obligatory prayer

This prayer is called the Oratio Imparata, or obligatory prayer. Sin called on the parishes to recite this prayer during daily Mass, asking God to "protect us and spare us who are faced with the danger of the mysterious sickness of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome."

The obligatory prayer originated from the early century Catholic Church and is a plea for help for those "contaminated" with diseases. It seeks divine intervention in times of calamities and inexplicable natural catastrophes.

The Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines made a similar call during the onslaught of El Niño in 1998. But it had revised the prayer to make it into a prayer for rain. Then CBCP president, Archbishop Oscar Cruz said then that, "This prayer was so powerful that if used during El Niño, violent rains coupled with flooding would come instead..."

The prayer was also used in 1982-83 during another El Niño spell which ravaged crops and livestock worth P5 billion.

Patron in times of pestilence

Sin also asked parishes under the patronage of San Roque, patron saint in times of pestilence and in cases of incurable illnesses, to "make special prayers and penitential procession" for protection against SARS.

The circular, Sin said, was intended to encourage people to "observe protection in certain religious practices."

Alarmed by the "mysterious sickness" that has already claimed several Filipino lives, Sin asked

CARDINAL SIN

Catholics to "move together as a Christian community, believing the promise of the Lord that with great faith, we can move mountains."

He also asked that intentions be inserted in the intercession and prayers during Masses, asking God to spare the Filipinos and the world from SARS, and that those suffering from the disease be healed "and find comfort and consolation offered by our Christian communities."

The intentions should also be dedicated to those providing medical care to SARS patients, that people grant them "support and understanding for the delicate task they must perform," Sin said.

Several other Catholic communities in the world have already imposed restrictions in their respective jurisdictions to prevent the spread of SARS. Such measures include the congregation being discouraged from holding hands during the praying of the "Our Father" and from shaking hands as a sign of peace and are instead encouraged to just nod to each other.

In some countries like Singapore, priests no longer hear confessions to prevent close contact with parishioners who might be infected with SARS. Instead, they are given a general absolution by the priests. With a report from AFP

The husband has not shown SARS symptoms.

Dr. Adelaida Asperin, chief of the hospital, said an X-ray, done shortly after JP was admitted at the EVRMC on Friday afternoon, yielded negative for pneumonia.

Still, JP will be considered a SARS patient pending results of tests on blood samples taken from her.

Mila Bachu-Bacus, Department of Health director for Eastern Visayas, could not say if there was a need to quarantine the village where JP lives.

JP is from Barangay Maybucog, about a kilometer away from the town proper of Maydolong, Eastern Samar.

The attending physician of JP and her husband has also been placed under isolation.

The doctor, a staff member of EVRMC, is given his daily ration of food and can only be contacted through his cellular phone. He wears complete protective gear including N95 mask, goggles, disposable protective gown, gloves, boots and shoe cover.

Dr. Nicholas Bautista, chief epidemiologist of the DOH Eastern Visayas who fetched JP from her residence, said JP made only four contacts—her husband, her parents and their houseboy.

The parents and the houseboy had agreed to undergo voluntary quarantine.

Discrimination

EVRMC staff complained they were being discriminated against since JP was confined there.

A male employee said drivers of public utility vehicles in Tacloban refused to take medical staff to the hospital.

Jose Cular, a motorcab driver, admitted he has refused to take passengers to the EVRMC, especially if they are medical workers.

"I might be infected by SARS. I am just trying to protect myself," he said.

A female nurse at the medical ward said she was hesitant to report for work after JP was brought to the hospital.

"I am afraid not only for myself but for my own family," she said.

She said she did not feel like going to work when she learned that JP was in the hospital.

The EVRMC, designed as the SARS center for Eastern Visayas, has 420 staff members.

Fewer patients

Asperin admitted that there were fewer patients at the EVRMC since JP was admitted to the hospital. She could not however say how many patients had left the hospital.

The EVRMC has a 250-bed capacity but sometimes the number of patients reaches more than 300, Asperin said.

Asperin warned EVRMC personnel that she would not think twice about terminating their employment if they showed reluctance in attending to JP.

"If they cannot follow orders, they better resign. They should not renege on their duties," she said.

Letran is the first school in the Philippines to partner with Microsoft in the IT Academy program. With MISNet, a Microsoft Gold Certified Partner for Support Services and a Certified Technical Education Center, the Colegio empowers its curriculum by integrating the Microsoft Official Curriculum (MOC) in its basic IT core subjects. The program offers tracks designed to meet the certifications for career opportunities as Microsoft Certified Professional (MCP), Microsoft Certified Systems Engineer (MCSE), Microsoft Certified Systems Administrator (MCSE), Microsoft Certified Database Administrator (MCDBA) and a Microsoft Certified Solution Developer (MCSD). Students enrolled under the BS I.T. program are given the chance to decide on a path to earn their chosen Microsoft Certification. Whether their goal is MCP or to have a premiere certification like MCSE, MCSD, MCDBA, MCSA, all paths lead to a great future in an IT career. Given this advantage, they are able to earn a BS I.T. diploma from Letran as well as a Microsoft Certification that is recognized worldwide!

them. We should help them go to health facilities to be isolated," he told the INQUIRER.

At a briefing Friday, Secretary Manuel Dayrit said the Department of Health was bracing for "the possibility of seeing [more] SARS cases in remote areas" because of returning OFWs.

He said yesterday that there was still no strong indication that OFWs were being "stigmatized as a group."

"But if you come from Hong Kong, [one of the hardest-hit areas in Asia], people are likely to stay away from you," he said.

Dayrit said the issue was something that the DOH was trying to address. "We need to step up our information dissemination efforts to ensure that everything is OK," he said.

Vaccine years away

In Kuala Lumpur, WHO official Mark Salter said the search for an effective vaccine would take time.

"I think we are looking at two years, three years maybe, before a vaccine," he said, adding that WHO planned to pull together world vaccine experts next week to speed things along.

In Alcala, Pangasinan, the quarantine imposed on three zones of Barangay Vacante here is expected to be officially lifted today despite the Department of Health's confirmation Friday that SARS caused the deaths of a woman and her father from the village.

The lifting of the isolation period was initially scheduled yesterday. Health officials put it off for today to allow for a final examination of the quarantined residents for symptoms of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

Quarantine extended

But in Manila, Dayrit said he had ordered a five-day extension of the quarantine on a number of households in Vacante. The members of these households were the close contacts of Mauricio Catalon, who died of SARS on April 22 after being infected by his daughter Adela.

Dayrit deferred Mauricio's burial, earlier scheduled yesterday, to Wednesday.

Mauricio's wife, their son and a granddaughter who are in quarantine at the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine in Alabang will be told to stay on until the end of the month, in observance of the regulatory two-week isolation period. Their last contact with Mauricio was on April 16.

The close contacts of Adela Catalon, who died on April 14, have been cleared.

Dayrit also said the latest X-rays of JP, the country's fourth SARS case and now in isolation at the Eastern Visayas Regional Medical Center, showed that she no longer had symptoms of pneumonia and had recovered from fever.

But more tests will be conducted on JP, who is afflicted with tuberculosis, to determine the gravity of her ailment, Dayrit said.

He also said none of JP's four close contacts had exhibited SARS symptoms as of press time. (See story on page A1.)

In an executive order issued Friday night, President Macapagal-Arroyo vested Dayrit with sweeping powers, including the authority to use the police and military, to contain SARS.

The President yesterday said she would take the EO with her to the Asean leaders summit on SARS in Bangkok on Tuesday, hopefully along with proposed legislation on "strengthening the penalties for violating the rules to prevent SARS from spreading."

In her EO, Ms. Macapagal also threatened to slap administrative sanctions on public officials who refuse to cooperate with government measures.

The other day, Tacloban Mayor Alfredo "Bejo" Romualdez Sr. tried to block a DOH team that was taking JP from Maydolong, Eastern Samar, to the EVRC in Tacloban.

The mayor relented only after his cousin Alberto Romualdez, a former health secretary, convinced him that measures had been taken to prevent the spread of the SARS virus in the city.

Pangasinan health officer Dr. Nemesia Mejia said the extended isolation period in Vacante would cover only four households.

No complaints

Regional epidemiologist Evelyn Cayabyab, who has been coordinating the isolation procedures, said the members of these households did not complain when informed of the extension.

"I told them to be patient ... and they understood the situation," she said.

With the lifting of the isolation period, life in Vacante—where community activities such as a fiesta and a wedding had to be postponed—is expected to return to normal.

Pangasinan health officials said a medical team would visit the barangay this morning to take the temperature of each resident covered by the quarantine.

"Happily, no one from the isolated zones has developed fever as of Saturday," Mejia said.

Teams from the local police and the regional and provincial police mobile groups have been taking turns in enforcing the quarantine.

Cayabyab said the policemen guarding the barangay would now be pulled out. She said there was no need for police to guard the four houses still to be quarantined because the Catalons' relatives already knew the "rules of isolation."

"Now my men can rest," said Chief Insp. Sotero Soriano Jr., Alcala police chief.

But Florence Baldomero, a resident of Vacante and a distant relative of the Catalons, said that despite the police presence, the isolation of the three zones had not been strictly enforced.

She said that during the distribution of relief goods, the quarantined residents freely mingled with the residents of the barangay's other three zones.

"So where's the isolation procedure that they're talking about?" she said.

No cop sick

Senior Supt. Leopoldo Bataoil said no one among the policemen belonging to the detachment in Alcala had come down with SARS.

Bataoil made the disclosure to belie speculations that a policeman afflicted with SARS was treated at the Philippine National Police General Hospital in Camp Crame a few days ago.

"So far, none of our policemen in any part of the country, including those posted in Alcala, was monitored to have contracted the disease," Bataoil said in a phone interview.

He said the Alcala policemen, whose main job consisted of setting up checkpoints and stopping residents from leaving the quarantined area, had been advised to take precautionary measures, like wearing masks.

Quoting doctors at the PNP General Hospital, Bataoil said a policeman with fever and cough was admitted there on Wednesday but was discharged the next day.

But in a radio interview, PNP Director Ricardo de Leon said the policeman was referred to the San Lazaro Hospital in Manila for further check-up.

Meanwhile, the Armed Forces announced that it would send a team of military doctors and nurses to the Ninoy Aquino International Airport on Monday to beef up the medical teams assigned to screen arriving passengers.

The team, to be composed of three doctors and three nurses, will be rotated each week for a period of six months, according to Lt. Col. Daniel Lucero, chief of the military's public information office. With reports from Dona Z. Pazzibugan and TJ Burgonio

Where's P1-B SARS fund?

A MILITANT group of government health workers yesterday demanded the immediate release of the P1-billion fund Malacañang said it was allotting for SARS control.

With the Philippines no longer SARS-free, the government should be providing protective gear to public hospital personnel, said the Alliance of Health Workers Inc.

The group noted that "there are still no negative pressure isolation rooms for positive cases, while the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine may not be able to cope with SARS cases in the event of an outbreak."

The RTM only has a 50-bed capacity, that's why "other government hospitals should be ready, too," it added.

EAVES AND VENTS

(Or, what's a complete roof system?)

Did you know eaves and vents can keep your house cool this hot summer?

Eaves and vents form part of the complete roof system to protect your house from the sun's heat.

Vented eaves allow cool air to flow into the ceiling area and displace hot air. Hot air can turn "breathes out" or dissipates through the ridge and wall vents into the atmosphere.

Without these "breathes-out" and eaves, ridge and wall vents. They are the natural way to keep you cool this summer, to complement your airconditioning equipment.

Coca Cola shames Gin

By Marc Anthony Reyes

COCA Cola forced Barangay Ginebra to tie an all-time record in posting an 83-54 victory last night in the PBA Samsung All Filipino Cup at the Ynares Center in Antipolo.

The Kings went scoreless for almost 12 minutes spanning the third and fourth quarters, producing only two points in the third.

Ginebra duplicated Mobiline's two points in the first quarter when it lost to Sta. Lucia Realty (71-69) on Feb. 28, 2001.

"Our defense couldn't hold them that much," admitted Coca Cola coach Chot Reyes. "We caught them in their off-day."

It was, of course, an understatement because Ginebra almost re-wrote the record book for worst games.

Ginebra also tied the sixth lowest score in a game, tying six other teams. The lowest score ever was 47 by Shell when it lost to Mobiline (79-47) on May 3, 2000.

Mark Caguioa managed to surpass that mark with a free throw with 2:05 left.

It was also the second all-time low score for three quarters, one point shy of Shell's 27-point production when it bowed to San Miguel (86-50) on Oct. 25, 2000.

In that embarrassing quarter, the Kings went 1-for-18 from the field. Only Alex Crisano made a basket with 8:13 to go in the period.

Ginebra changed the scoreboard only with 9:37 left when Eric Menk made an underdog stab for a 60-30 count.

The Tigers raised their record to 6-5 while the Kings slipped to 4-9.

San Miguel Beer got the usual numbers from Nic Belasco and Danny Ildefonso to beat Alaska Milk, 78-69, in the first game.

Belasco, hero of the Beermen's conquest of the Aces in their previous meeting, scored 11 straight points in the fourth quarter as SMB repeated over Alaska for its sixth victory in 12 games.

The Aces, who rule Group A, fell twice in succession for an 8-5 card.

However, the triumph would not have been possible for the Beermen if not for Ildefonso's reassuring return after having gone in and out of games this conference due to a recurring knee injury.

"I think he's doing fine now, he really provided us a boost today," said SMB coach Jong Uichico.

A WALL along Edsa in Quezon City is transformed into a canvas of a colorful geometric artwork executed by MMDA artists.

ERNIE U. SARMIENTO

Winning the war on wall art

By Leila B. Salaverria

THERE'S a battle going on between artists of the Metro Manila Development Authority and vandals.

The prize: Domination over walls and posts all over the metropolis.

So far, the MMDA artists appear to be winning as more of their artworks gain prominence over graffiti.

MMDA Traffic Operations Center Director Angelito Vergel de Dios said the amount of graffiti that had previously marred the walls and posts on main thoroughfares, particularly Edsa, has "noticeably lessened" since the MMDA began deploying its own artists earlier this year.

"(The vandals) are probably irked that their graffiti had been painted over, which is why some of them never returned to paint over that particular stretch of wall again," Vergel de Dios said in a recent interview.

Instead of slogans or symbols drawn with spray, most of the walls along Edsa have been painted over with geometric shapes in pastel colors. The signature "MMDA ART" is also found beneath the artworks.

Vergel de Dios explained that geometric shapes are used to cover the graffiti because simpler forms are faster to draw, and uses up less paint.

He also noted that the posts and walls along Edsa, Ramon Magsaysay Boulevard in Manila and the area around Malacañang are a favorite of vandals.

But while most of the graffiti on Edsa have been minimized, the area around Malacañang still poses a problem because it's a frequent venue of rallies.

During these gatherings, protesters post leaflets and spray paint their messages on the walls.

In January this year, the MMDA deployed teams of artists to transform the graffiti into artworks. The teams are also tasked with scrubbing leaflets or stickers off the walls.

The idea behind the project is to make graffiti less of an eyesore and discourage vandals from defacing the walls and posts again.

The project has elicited mixed reactions from passersby.

A 40-year-old security guard stationed in the Ortigas area agrees that the paint-over is a right step.

"Of course, vandals won't spray-paint over MMDA art because their messages would not stand out against the colors," the guard, who requested anonymity, said.

But other passersby said the MMDA art cannot eliminate graffiti completely.

"Nothing can stop vandals from writing what they want on the walls," a candy vendor, 36, told the INQUIRER. "We live in a democracy, after all."

A student from Parañaque put it more bluntly. "Do they actually expect some overlapping colorful shapes to finally do the trick?" Donna, 19, said.

With a report from Jamie Alarcon

Oil depot deadline to stay

THERE will be no extension of the April 30 deadline given to three oil firms in the Pandacan oil depot to shut down.

The Manila City Council said Caltex, Shell and Petron have to shut down operations in the depot after April 30 as provided in the memorandum of understanding between City Hall and the oil firms.

Council president pro tempore Alejandro "Kim" Atienza yesterday said the oil companies were "too slow" in complying with the MOU's terms, which include the dismantling of several fuel tanks, the creation of a green buffer zone and the setting up of a common distribution system.

The deadline to comply has been extended twice by the Council. But the oil companies have yet to fully comply with the MOU's terms.

If the MOU is not renewed, an ordinance converting the depot site from an industrial into a commercial zone and phasing out the facility would be in effect.

The oil firms are predicting "a fuel crisis" if the depot operations are shut down.

GOVERNMENT SERVICE INSURANCE SYSTEM
Kahit saan, kahit kailan, maaasahan.

6 mayors declare support for Vicencio

Car thieves rarely get convicted

By Ma. Ceres P. Doyo
Conclusion

INSURANCE companies who sell total wrecks along with these wrecked vehicles' papers know that the buyers are not interested in the junk but in the junk's papers and serialized parts. These wrecks will be resurrected. This is the reason behind the "orders" for the wreck's look-alikes, kakambal or twins.

Stolen MVs will assume the identities of the wrecks much like the way fugitives take on the identities of dead persons, preferably unknowns. But this type of operation is very deliberate and needs planning. It is not worth it if the vehicle to be brought back to life is not top-of-the-line.

Police Senior Superintendent Eliseo de la Paz, technical assistant for operations and law enforcement at the Land Transportation Office, said wrecks being sold at insurance auctions is a problem, a "hole that needs to be plugged."

"We have recommended that all documents of wrecks be shelved," said De la Paz, who spoke about "preferred clients" to whom insurance companies sell wrecks.

Reviving 'wrecks'

But the question remains: Who is to declare a wreck a wreck? Who should tell insurers that the wreck they are selling at a high price—with the vehicle's registration and with a deed of sale—is junk that should not get into the hands of assemblers?

With a wreck in their hands, the car theft syndicate needs a vehicle, a look-alike preferably, and of the same model to make it come to life. So the operatives spot for a "twin."

Serialized parts of the stolen vehicle are removed and in their place the serialized parts of the wreck are transferred. And since the wreck and its documents were bought from the insurance and have a deed of sale, transfer of ownership cannot be questioned.

When the stolen vehicle (that now has the serialized parts and genuine documents of the wreck) is sold, the seller and the buyer execute a deed of sale. All documents are genuine and the transaction is above board.

This is as "clean" as it can get without connivance from government agencies. When it gets to second-hand car dealers, it is presented as a fully documented, previously legitimately owned vehicle.

Hardly any conviction

The anti-fencing law (PD 1612) and anti-car theft law (RA 6539) are supposed to curb car theft and prevent sale of stolen MVs from thriving. The bad news is that despite the laws, hardly anyone has been convicted and jailed for car theft.

Police superintendent Alberto

TRAFFIC Management Group authorities view the remains of a suspected car thief who was killed in a shootout in Quezon City.

RANDY HORMILLOS

M. Taguiam Jr., chief of Traffic Management Group's legal division, said that for a car thief to get convicted, the victim has to fully cooperate or file a complaint.

There has to be witnesses, with the car thief preferably caught in the act. Mere possession of a stolen vehicle does not constitute car theft. The suspect could be charged with violating the anti-fencing law.

Car thieves who do SWP are fast in opening car doors, dismantling anti-theft gadgets and even disabling the alarm system. Said a cop detailed with TMG's Task Force Limbas: "That anti-theft gadget hooked on the wheel and the break pedal is easy to unhinge. One good kick and it is off."

In the absence of an alarm system, he suggests the metal bar that is placed across the wheel. It can't be kicked and locks the wheel more securely. It's no match against a gun, of course.

While keeping a copy of the OC-CR in the car is necessary for police checks, it is better to keep it in one's wallet or bag. Because if car thieves find a copy of the car's OC-CR in your car, this means they know right away who the owner is.

If registration renewal is soon, they could have someone pose as the owner and register the MV under the owner's name in another place and request for a new car plate number. The car's color could even be changed.

Beware of valet parking

One should also avoid leaving the car key with valet parking attendants. If you have to, leave the duplicate, not the main key that could open the trunk. The key could go to the wrong hands and be duplicated and the car could be marked as easy prey.

Through the car plate number, the car owner's name and address could easily be found at the LTO—and his or her whereabouts tracked.

Car thieves also go to parking lots, park their decrepit car, pick up someone else's car and drive away with it. Guards don't always read the plate number written on the parking stub to see if the car being driven out is the right one. Car thieves would have more difficulty with parking that uses digital cards.

Read the fine print

One should read the fine print on parking stubs. Mall and parking lot owners are not responsible for losses. One should always turn the alarm system or secure the wheel with an anti-theft gadget.

Most paid parking places have warning for drivers not to stay inside the car while waiting. The same applies when parked in public places. Inside paid parking areas, car thieves could still take the car and parking stub at gun point.

Before going out of your gate and coming in especially at night, look if there are suspicious characters near your gate. They could take your car at gun point and worse, ask you to open your home to them.

If a suspicious vehicle is trailing you, drive fast to the nearest police outpost or a place that you think is safe. And if a gun is pointed at you, give up the car. Your life is more important.

Certificate

If your car is stolen while parked (SWP) or forcibly taken (FT), report the incident to the police precinct of the area where it happened. You will be asked to write a complaint sheet after which you will be issued a certification.

From there, proceed to Task Force Limbas (or its equivalent in your area). Present the complaint sheet and certification. You will be issued an alarm sheet containing the circumstances pertaining to your loss. The police will also send out an alarm to various regions.

The Philippine National Police's Traffic Management Group (TMG) issues the certificate of non-recovery (for insurance claims) after 90 days at the most. To get this you have to submit clear machine copies of the complaint and alarm sheets mentioned earlier plus identification document and picture.

Documents needed

From the LTO where your vehicle was originally registered, get clear and authenticated copies of the following: vehicle sales invoice, LTO confirmation certificate, LTO motor vehicle report showing the stencil of the motor and chassis numbers, PNO motor vehicle clearance certificate, and other proofs of ownership.

Shabu found in abandoned car in QC

By Alcuin Papa

EIGHT kilos of shabu worth P16 million in the streets were found in an abandoned car in Quezon City last Thursday.

Chief Supt. Napoleon Castro, head of the Central Police District, said the drugs were recovered by members of CPD Station 5 at around 12:30 a.m.

According to a CPD report, PO2 Reynaldo Borje, PO3 Eduardo Dacalos, and PO1 Reynaldo Magtajas were on patrol in the Batasan area when they spotted a white Honda Civic (WHJ-515) parked on Regalado Avenue.

When the patrolmen were about to accost the vehicle's passengers, the man and woman inside the car left the vehicle and ran.

The policemen failed to collar the suspects.

When police opened the suspects' vehicle, they were surprised to find the illegal drugs stored in a backpack. With a report from Mary Viel Marquez

Fire

THE HOUSE of Barangay Forbes Park Chair Jose Concepcion's brother was razed in a fire in Makati City on Friday. Another fire hit a community in Sta. Ana, Manila on the same day and left 90 families homeless. The Makati fire began at around 5:30 a.m. In the living room of Reynaldo Concepcion's house on Banaba Street, South Forbes Park.

Arson Investigators pegged property damage at P5 million. The fire was put out at 10:10 a.m. In Sta. Ana, the two-hour fire started at 6:02 a.m. In Rosita Torres' two-story house on Callejon Street, Pasigline. Thirty houses and about P7 million worth of property were destroyed in the fire that was put out at 8:02 a.m., an investigator said.

Raid

A MAN was shot to death while three other men, including a police officer, were injured when vendors tried to fight off Videogram Regulatory Board authorities, who conducted an anti-piracy raid at the Midland Bazaar in Guadalupe Nuevo, Makati City on Wednesday. VCD vendor Mubarak Khalil was declared dead at the Victor Potenciano Memorial Medical Center in Mandaluyong City, said PO2 Jason David. Injured were vendors Amradin Tahar and Abu Gampong, and PO2 Francisco de Asis. Police are still trying to determine who fired the fatal shot.

Police said the vendors believed the raid was not a legitimate operation, and that the 20-man VRB team were there to steal their wares. When the VRB team announced the raid at around 5 p.m., the vendors, who outnumbered the team, put up a fight and a free-for-all ensued. A shot rang out, and Khalil was found on the ground with a bullet in his abdomen.

Conviction

FOR SELLING shabu worth P200, Ramon Reyes and Peter Mendez were sentenced to life imprisonment by Judge Francisco Ibay of the Makati Regional Trial Court branch 135. Reyes, a welder, and Mendez, a tricycle driver, were also ordered each to pay P500,000 in fines. Members of Makati's drug enforcement unit and anti-drug abuse council arrested the two men in 2002. Reyes, 21, was arrested for selling 0.13 grams of shabu worth P200 to a policeman in Barangay Rizal. Mendez, 31, was hauled in for selling P200 worth of shabu to a lawman in Barangay Comerbo. Reyes and Mendez denied that they sold shabu.

Murder

NESTOR E. Villanueva, 42, won big while playing long-its (a card game) during the wake of a certain Oscar Lanson in Tondo, Manila. But he lost his life on Thursday when he tried to collect his winnings. Detective Virgo Villareal said Donato A. Clave, 50, a vendor and resident of Tondo, stabbed and killed Villanueva, also of Tondo, because the suspect had no money to pay the victim. Clave allegedly continued playing although he no longer had money. Villanueva got angry when Clave could not pay back the money he owed the victim. At around 10 p.m. on Thursday, Clave sneaked up on Villanueva and stabbed him to death.

SIX METRO Manila mayors yesterday allegedly threw their support behind Amado Vicencio, the Malabon City mayor who was ordered suspended for the dubious purchase of property intended for squatters.

Malabon Public Information Officer Gerry Gonzales claimed that the six mayors already signed a manifesto of support for Vicencio during Metro Manila Mayors Council meeting yesterday afternoon.

Gonzales said Jejomar Binay of Makati and Lito Atienza of Manila chaired yesterday's meeting where the six mayors declared their support for Vicencio.

Gonzales refused to identify who the mayors were.

The information officer also said that 16 of the 21 barangay chairs of the Association of Barangay Captains of Malabon issued their own manifesto of support for the mayor yesterday afternoon.

With this development, Malabon residents now face the real prospect of having two mayors governing their city.

On Thursday, Vice Mayor Mark Allan Jay Yambao took his oath of office in a Quezon City restaurant, after Department of Interior and Local Government officials served the preventive suspension order to Vicencio.

The mayor's supporters are now criticizing the way the suspension order was served to Vicencio. They are also questioning the validity of the order.

"The suspension order was just posted at the gate (of Vicencio's house in Aranate Village, Potrero), Gonzales said. "Under the law it should be delivered personally, through mail or by publication."

DILG officials said they tried to serve the order four times at the Malabon City Hall. But each time, they failed because of the barricade put up by Vicencio's supporters.

Vicencio earlier announced that he would not step down from office and vowed to fight the suspension order.

Firm owns up tainted water rap in Las Piñas

Waterworks disconnected pipes at the subdivision and began flushing out "dark" water, according to Mercaida.

Once the water becomes clear, he said, the firm would then reconnect the pipes and treat the water with heavy doses of chlorine.

"The process would take time," Mercaida said. "But at least we'll be sure that the water would be safe and clean."

Residents began complaining of high fever, vomiting, diarrhea, and other ailments when the firm operated a new water pump, Santos said.

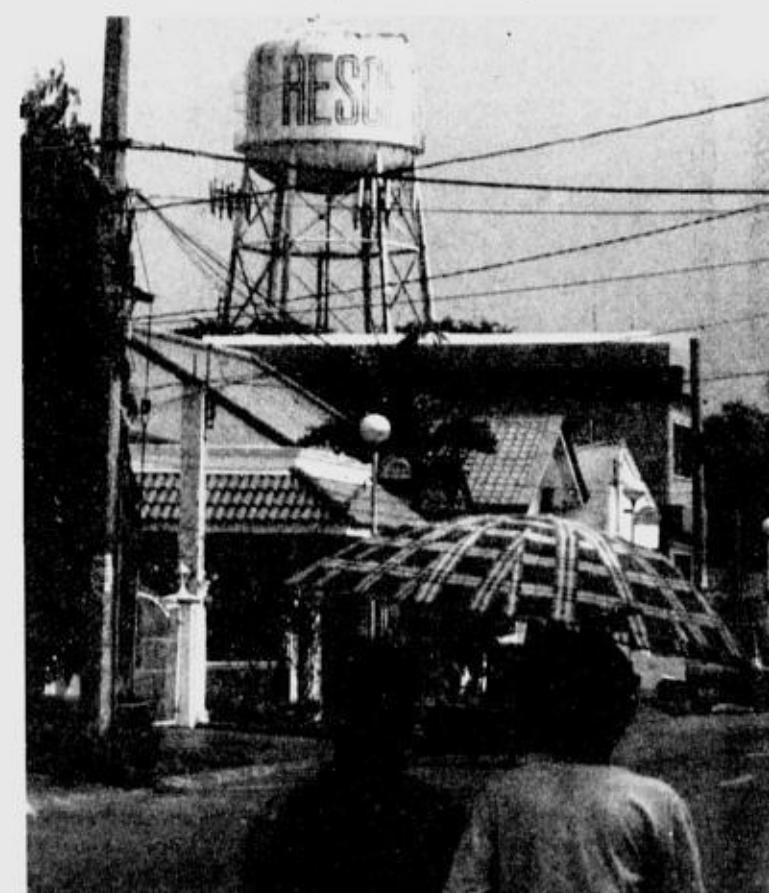

Mercaida had admitted that the pump could have flushed dirty sediments from previously unused pipes into the main water system.

Early this month, Santos described the tap water as "black as coffee."

He said the water looked that way for at least eight hours.

"It's not even good for laundry or for washing dishes," Santos said.

As of Friday, residents were still complaining of discoloration in their tap water.

A PRIVATE water company in Las Piñas has claimed responsibility for the contaminated water that has sent several residents to the hospital.

Chinoy woman, driver abducted in Binondo

Dante was driving the victim's dark green Honda CRV (WKB-598) when three armed men on board a black car (WDH-354) blocked their path on Del Pan corner Valderama streets at around 1:30 a.m.

One of the suspects got down from the car, poked a gun at the driver and told him to transfer to the front passenger's seat.

While the driver transferred seats, the sister opened the car door on her side and escaped. She went directly to the police and reported the incident. The WPD's intelligence and investigation division has taken on the case.

PBA gets tough on drug abusers

By Marc Anthony Reyes

THE PHILIPPINE Basketball Association, shocked and alarmed by the case of peppery point guard Jimwell Torion, who tested positive for shabu use, has vowed to adopt harsher measures against drug offenders in the league.

The PBA said it is set to come out with detailed guidelines to address its alarming drug issues that have claimed three of its superstars, the latest being Torion who has been banned indefinitely after traces of shabu were found in his urine.

League technical chief Perry Martinez yesterday said there are already measures in place when a player gets caught using prohibited substance.

MILF could save Palaro Rebs' assurance to spare Lanao games sought

THE IMPERILED Palarong Pambansa may be staged as scheduled in Lanao del Norte but only if the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) would agree to keep peace in the province.

This possibility surfaced yesterday following reports that an assurance was being sought from the MILF for it not to disrupt the Palaro scheduled at the Maharlika Sports Complex in the capital town of Tubod on May 4-11.

Earlier, the Philippine National Police proposed the staging of the Palarong Pambansa outside of Lanao del Norte following the outbreak of clashes between government troops and secessionist rebels.

The clashes, which erupted after MILF rebels attacked Kolambungan and Maigo towns in the province on Thursday morning, left at least 16 people dead and several others wounded.

Maigo and Kolambungan are the two towns nearest the capital town of Tubod, the venue of the national games.

Philippine Sports Commission chair Eric Buhain had said the Palaro will definitely push through this year but added there was nothing definite yet as to the date and venue.

But reliable sources yesterday said the Palaro could be held in Lanao del Norte as scheduled if the MILF would accede to a formal request that it spare the province from hostilities at least during the Games.

The same sources did not identify the figure who made the request with the rebel group but said he was a very influential person.

It was also reported that MILF chair Hashim Salamat was looking kindly at the request. He is said to be a sports lover.

Meanwhile, the police and the military are scheduled to give their assessment tomorrow on whether Lanao del Norte is still fit to stage the 2003 Palarong Pambansa.

Lanao del Norte Gov. Imelda Quibranza-Dimaporo said they would rely on the Armed Forces and the Philippine National Police to give them the real score after new fighting broke out in the province.

Lanao del Norte, the Philippine Sports Commission and the Department of Education will then make their recommendation to President Arroyo.

Dimaporo said it is the President who will make the final decision on the Palaro.

The province was looking at a grim prospect of losing the Palaro yet again following the outbreak of hostilities in two towns near Tubod, the main hub of competition.

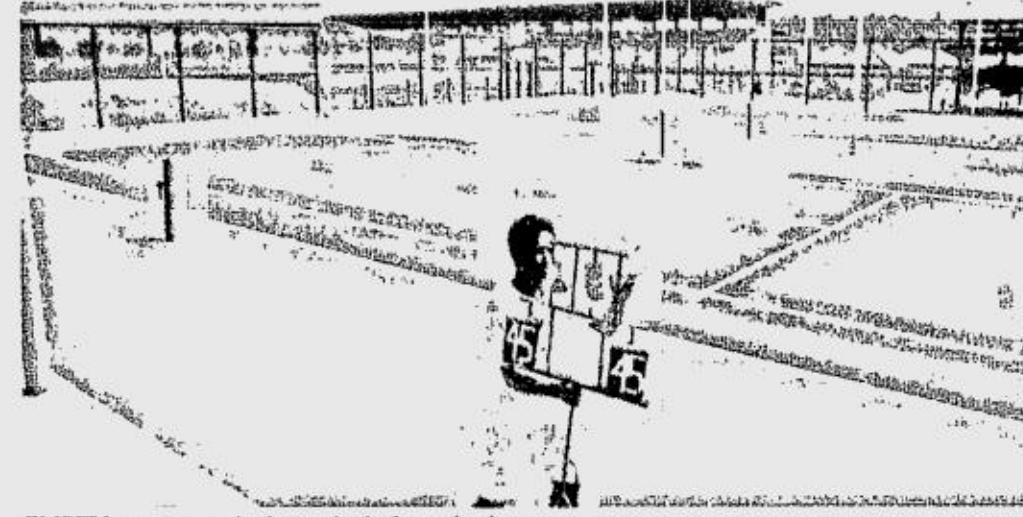

Lanao del Norte, which made its first hosting bid in 1997, has been denied the honor three times already.

In 1997, it lost to Lingayen, Pangasinan and was forced to withdraw the following year due to the economic crunch that hit the Asian region.

In 2000, the province blew it again after then President Joseph Estrada declared an all-out war against MILF which reduced Kauswagan town to a battle zone.

Last year, Dimaporo and her husband, Rep. Abdullah Dimaporo, agreed to give the hosting to Naga City upon the request of then DepEd Sec. Raul Roco.

Meanwhile, the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao delegates have arrived in the province, according to local Palaro organizers, even as Region 3 promised to send its athletes once the province is cleared.

"We here at the PSC have a complete trust in the Armed Forces as well as the Philippine National Police," said Buhain. "Once we get the whole picture of the peace and order situation of the province, I will go back to Secretary De Jesus and present it to the regional directors."

The MILF, after launching two attacks on Thursday, reportedly threatened to wreck the long preparation for the Palaro.

But an assurance of peace from the MILF could save the Palaro in Lanao del Norte. With reports from Marc Anthony Reyes

SAN PABLO CITY—Undefeated

Manila came from behind anew to down Ilam for the second time yesterday, escaping with a 5-3 decision to clinch the Big League 16-18 girls softball crown at the San Luis sports complex in Sta. Cruz, Laguna.

Regardless of the result of its remaining game against winless Nueva Ecija today in the three team bracket, Manila, bannered by crack UAAP players from Adamson and UST, will emerge with the best win-loss slate with three consecutive wins.

Ilam, whose core is made up of the disbanded defending titlist Bulacan, suffered its second loss in three games and can only hope to finish runner-up by beating Nueva Ecija tomorrow.

Trailing 2-3 after five innings, the Manilans swung things around for good with a two-out, three-run explosion in the lower sixth starring May Ann Delmo.

The big-hitting Delmo drove in Joan Arguelles and Sarah Jane Aggravante with a triple then followed them home minutes later as Manila duplicated its 7-3 conquest of ILAM in their first meeting.

"Malakas din ang kalaban pero kumpiyansa ako sa mga bata ko (The opposition was strong but we're confident of winning)," Manila LL chapter president Robert Evangelista said.

In Senior League 14-16 boys baseball, host San Pablo City's march to the four-team crossover semifinal was temporarily halted when it lost to undefeated Nueva Ecija, 11-1 at the central school grounds here.

The locals were nowhere near their best when they stunned Tanauan City 8-4 earlier, and were a sorry sight as they could only master three hits against the Novo Ecijano's eight.

Nueva Ecija maintained its leadership in Group B with its fourth straight win and assured itself of the first semifinal berth.

Meanwhile, Cebu and Makati notched their fourth straight victory to share top spot in Group A of the premier 11-12 Little League boys baseball. The Cebuanos toyed with their Bacolod neighbors, 13-2, while the Makati lads scalped the Ilocos boys, 18-6, to remain on course for semifinal slots.

In Big League 16-18 baseball, defending titlist Tanauan trounced erstwhile joint leader Makati, 13-4, to stay unscathed in four starts.

In the 11-12 girls softball in Sta. Cruz, Laguna, DepEd Bacolod demolished co-leader Mt. Province (3-1), 13-2, to remain undefeated in four games.

PBA games go off the air

By Roy Luarca

THE PHILIPPINE Basketball Association games have gone off the air, at least on radio.

Unable to lure advertisers for the radio broadcast of the games, the NBN-IBC merger has been constrained to hook up with the audio of the television broadcast since April 11.

This desperation move, however, has its drawbacks. For one, TV broadcast doesn't need graphic and detailed vocal description, much unlike the radio broadcast where listeners need to be thoroughly informed of the developments and given a feel of what's happening inside the court.

Also, the TV panelists usually do their thing in English while their radio counterparts do it in Taglish, which was preferred by more PBA CEBU CITY—With his father cheering at the stands, Nelbert Omolon decided it was show time.

The 6-foot-4 Omolon erupted for 36 points as Nutri-licious stunned Hapee Toothpaste in double overtime, 88-85, Friday night in the Sunkist-PBL Unity Cup at the Cebu Coliseum here.

The victory gave the Juicers the solo lead in the Luzon division with a 3-4 win-loss card. The Sparklers tasted only their second defeat in eight outings in the Visayas-Mindanao group. John O leads NCR with a similar 6-2 record.

"I want to treat my father (Gilbert) to a good game. I'm really delighted to see him around," said the 22-year-old Omolon, who played for the Philippine Christian University in the NCAA.

Omolon's businessman-father came all the way from Bukidnon to watch his son play for the Juicers, who thwarted the Sparklers' bid to become the first team to enter the semifinals.

This was the third time this conference that Nutri-licious experienced the heart-stopping ordeal of an overtime. American-trained Coach Monel Kallos' charges bowed to Blu Star Detergent in double overtime, 92-90, anti-drug policy is already outdated.

"Right now we are just relying on the discretion of the commissioner," Martinez told the INQUIRER. "But we are drafting strict measures and we'll come up with them by the second conference."

Commissioner Noli Eala, who was absent in the game held at the Ynares Center in Antipolo City yesterday, could not be reached for comment.

Martinez said the PBA plans to adopt the NBA policy which imposes a two-year ban on a player found to have used shabu or ecstasy. "They have a different standard with metamphetamine and ecstasy," he added.

He added that in the NBA, a marijuana first offender will just be required to undergo rehabilitation. Second offense would mean $15,000 fine without suspension, while two year-ban would be meted a player who made three offenses.

It was uncertain when Torion, who will reportedly undergo a six-month rehabilitation, would be allowed to rejoin his team, Red Bull.

He was found positive for shabu use following the mandatory random drug test conducted after the Red Bull-Ginebra match in Cebu last April 13.

Torion did admit to Red Bull team manager Tony Chua that he was invited by his old Cebuano friends to a party, where they later indulged in wild revelry.

"The good thing with him is last March 27 at the Makati Coliseum.

Owing to its lack of maturity, Nutri-licious lost steam in the homestretch to bow to Viva Mineral Water, 71-68, also in overtime last April 10 at the Pasig Sports Center.

Despite their failure to win overtime games, Kallos, however, remained confident that the Juicers would survive Hapee's stings.

"I felt confident that we can win take this one. We're a young team and it's a matter of knowing how to react on a given situation. Our gameplan is followed to the letter," said Kallos, who is assisted by former PBA hotshot Carlito Mejor.

Defeat stared at the face of Nutri-licious when Hapee, bannered by the high-scoring Peter June Simon, erased a six-point deficit to force the first overtime, 74-74.

Hapee also recorded the PBL's all-time best of sinking all its 12 shots (field goal) in the first period.

The collapse, however, did not happen. Instead, it was Hapee, as magnified by Allan Salangsang's 1 of 12 shooting from the three-point area, which failed to finish strong.

While praising Omolon for his gutsy showing, Kallos credited the teamwork and boundless energy for the win. "Going into a third overtime is welcome," Kallos said.

that he did not try to fool me by offering excuses," Chua explained. "I admire him for that."

Chua stressed that Torion, apologetic, admitted his mistakes.

In a media statement, Red Bull announced it has also suspended Torion "until he can prove that he has already overcome his problem."

Red Bull added that, in the wake of the ugly incidents involving players, the team will embark on a serious crusade against drugs in sports.

"We must think of stricter policies against this problem which must be implemented immediately," the Red Bull statement said.

It added Red Bull is behind the PBA in its crusade against drugs and will fully cooperate in all its programs.

Prior to the Torion case, Asi Taulava and Dorian Pefia tested positive for marijuana use before the start of the 2003 PBA season.

The two were slapped two-game suspensions.

In their game against Talk 'N Text on Friday, Red Bull, minus the quick-footed Torion, lost in overtime, 96-98.

Coach Yeng Guiao of Red Bull said he had taken up the Torion case with the management, which vowed to go hard on the erring star "even though we have something at stake."

Guiao said they would be discussing the Torion case with Commissioner Eala to determine if stricter measures would be imposed.

Manalang and Caloy Inductivo.

A PBA insider, however, said they're likely to be retained when the radio coverage resumes.

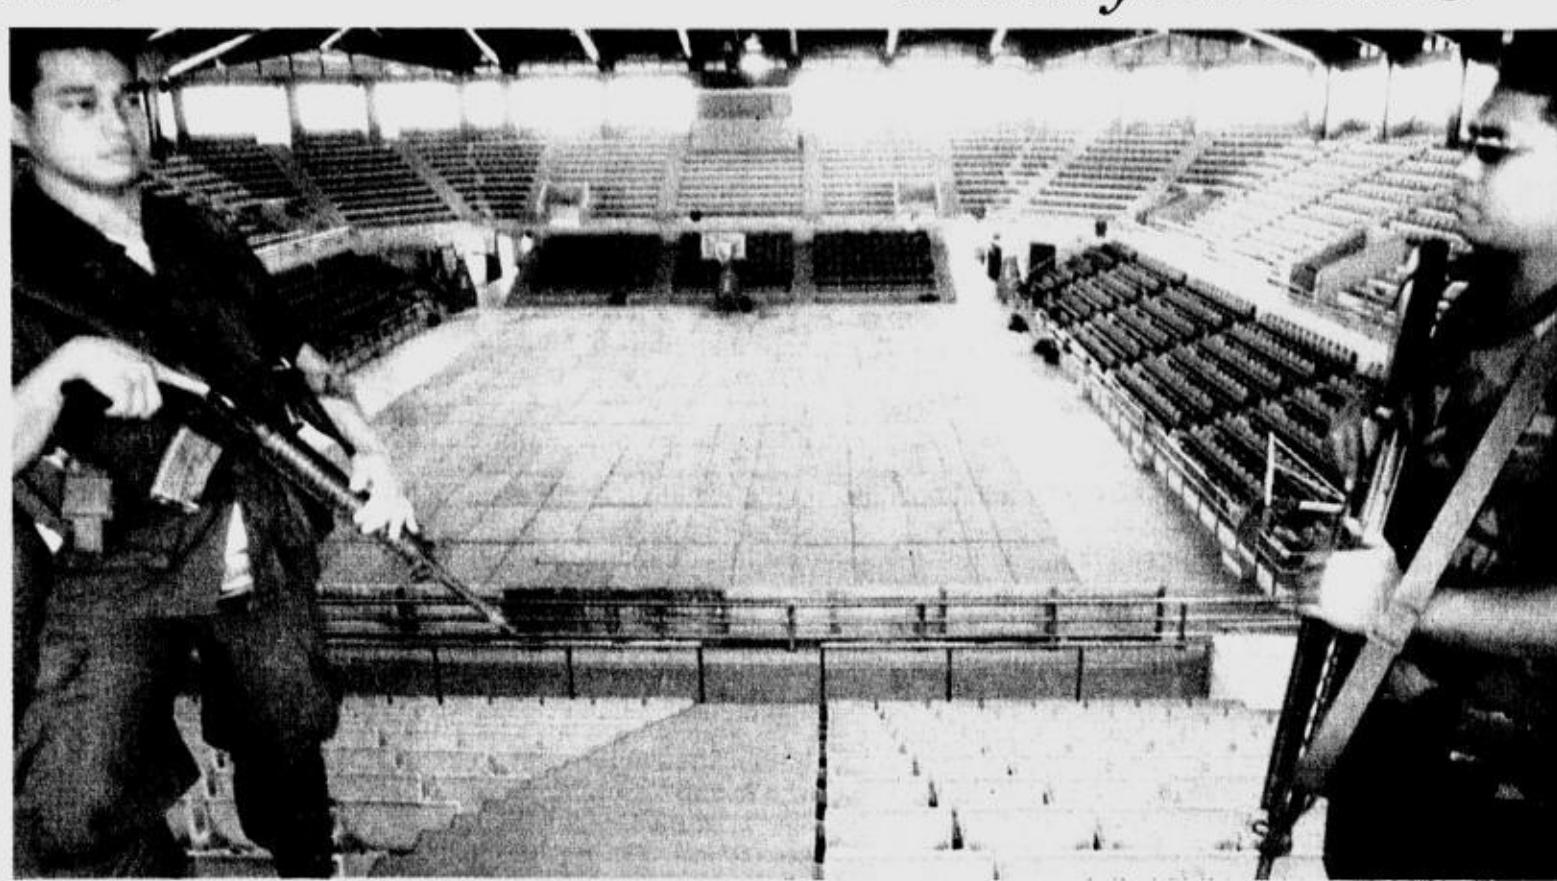

The PBA radio coverage was also hooked up with the TV broadcast last year when the panelists went on strike due to unpaid salaries.

This time, the panelists received provisional payment up to March 9 and willingly went on board up to April 9 to give the marketing arm more time to look for sponsors.

To prevent more "bleeding," the panelists were finally told to stop broadcast on April 11.

The hook-up set-up apparently doesn't sit well with PBA fans as a visit to the Pinoy Exchange website revealed that PBA fans want the radio coverage back and that it enjoyed a high rating, especially during rush hours.

Commissioner Noli Eala, who was absent in the game held at the Ynares Center in Antipolo City yesterday, could not be reached for comment.

Martinez said the PBA plans to adopt the NBA policy which imposes a two-year ban on a player found to have used shabu or ecstasy. "They have a different standard with metamphetamine and ecstasy," he added.

He added that in the NBA, a marijuana first offender will just be required to undergo rehabilitation. Second offense would mean $15,000 fine without suspension, while two year-ban would be meted a player who made three offenses.

It was uncertain when Torion, who will reportedly undergo a six-month rehabilitation, would be allowed to rejoin his team, Red Bull.

He was found positive for shabu use following the mandatory random drug test conducted after the Red Bull-Ginebra match in Cebu last April 13.

Torion did admit to Red Bull team manager Tony Chua that he was invited by his old Cebuano friends to a party, where they later indulged in wild revelry.

"The good thing with him is

Chua stressed that Torion, apologetic, admitted his mistakes.

In a media statement, Red Bull announced it has also suspended Torion "until he can prove that he has already overcome his problem."

Red Bull added that, in the wake of the ugly incidents involving players, the team will embark on a serious crusade against drugs in sports.

"We must think of stricter policies against this problem which must be implemented immediately," the Red Bull statement said.

It added Red Bull is behind the PBA in its crusade against drugs and will fully cooperate in all its programs.

Prior to the Torion case, Asi Taulava and Dorian Peña tested positive for marijuana use before the start of the 2003 PBA season.

The two were slapped two-game suspensions.

In their game against Talk 'N Text on Friday, Red Bull, minus the quick-footed Torion, lost in overtime, 96-98.

Coach Yeng Guiao of Red Bull said he had taken up the Torion case with the management, which vowed to go hard on the erring star "even though we have something at stake."

Guiao said they would be discussing the Torion case with Commissioner Eala to determine if stricter measures would be imposed.

Manalang and Caloy Inductivo.

A PBA insider, however, said they're likely to be retained when the radio coverage resumes.

The PBA radio coverage was also hooked up with the TV broadcast last year when the panelists went on strike due to unpaid salaries.

This time, the panelists received provisional payment up to March 9 and willingly went on board up to April 9 to give the marketing arm more time to look for sponsors.

To prevent more "bleeding," the panelists were finally told to stop broadcast on April 11.

The hook-up set-up apparently doesn't sit well with PBA fans as a visit to the Pinoy Exchange website revealed that PBA fans want the radio coverage back and that it enjoyed a high rating, especially during rush hours.

LEGAZPI CITY—Veteran Arnel Quirimbit, riding true to form, outspurts breakaway partner Merculio Ramos yesterday to capture the opening lap of the Tour Pilipinas 2003 bikathon.

Quirimbit, skipper of the Tanduay Distillers, finished four seconds ahead of Ramos as he clocked four hours 32 minutes and 43 seconds for the 183-km drive that marked the return of multi-stage cycling after a four-year hiatus.

Known for his aggressive riding, Quirimbit credited Ramos of Samsung for helping him sustain a breakaway the two pulled off some 50 km from the finish line.

"Nagtulungan kaming dalawa kaya hindi kami mayayadong nahirapan sa akyatan (We took turns setting a strong pace especially in the mountains)," said the 24-year-old Quirimbit from Pozzorubio, Pan-gasinan.

Eusebio Quinones of Patrol 117 salvaged third place, coming home 2:49 behind Quirimbit as he pulled away from a four-man second group in the final kilometer.

Placido Valdez and Benito Lopez arrived together just four seconds behind Quinones with Santi Barnachea, who paced the lead pack for the most part of the race, struggling home another four seconds behind the two.

The rest of the big guns checked in with the 13-man seventh group that former champion Rolando Pagnanawon towed to the finish, 6:20 behind the lap winner.

In this star-studded pack were tour favorites and former winners Warren Davadilla of Intel and Carlo Guieb of Eco Savers and promising youngsters Lloyd Reynante and Rhyan Tanguilig of Pagcor.

Renato Dolosa of Gilbey's Island Punch, a two-time champion like Guieb, failed to keep up with his peers, however. He wheeled home 8:54 behind Quirimbit in the company of 10 others.

Quinones' third place finish lifted Patrol 117 to the early lead in the team race where a whooping purse of P1 million awaits the winner. Patrol had a best four-man time of 18:37:50.8.

The VAT Riders took second with a time of 18:38:31.5 while Intel was third with 18:41:58.2.

Quirimbit and Ramos scampered away from the main pack in the uphill approach to Tabaco City from Ligao, Albay.

first climb then we alternated at the pace until the finish)," said Ramos, who finished 12th in the 180-km road race of the 2002 Busan Asian Games.

Barnachea of Bowling Gold tried to defuse the breakaway but had no more to give after towing the pack for more than 120 km.

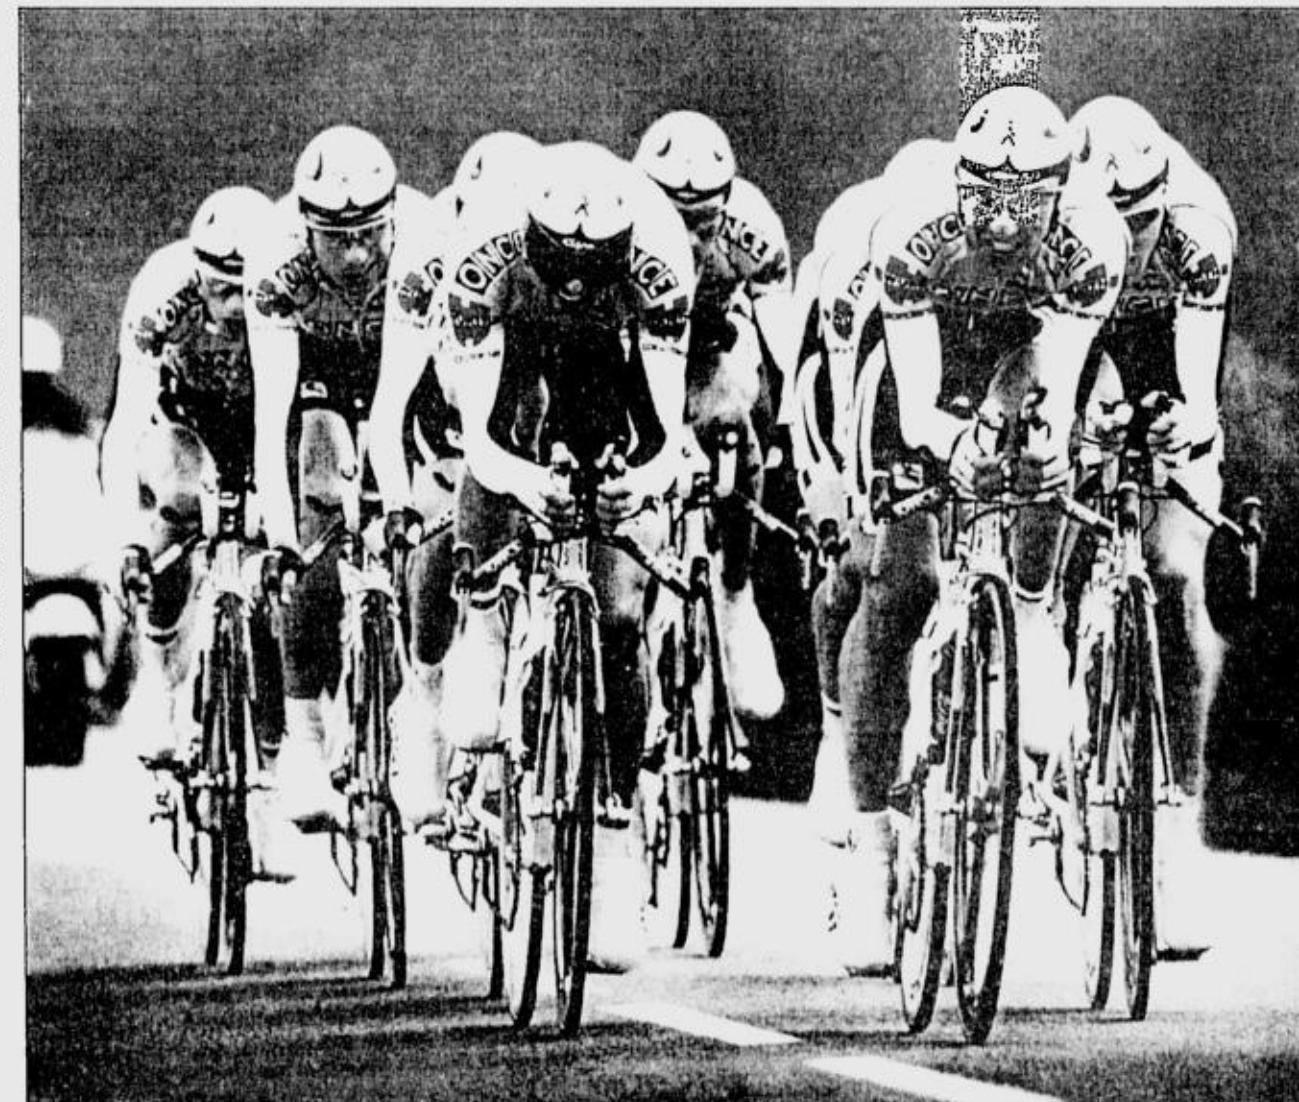

"Leader ako 90 percent ng karera kaya maaga akong nalaspag. Hindi bale, maraming laps pa naman (I lost steam by providing pace for the pack early. Anyway there are many laps left," said Barnachea of Umingan, Pan-gasinan.

All 84 riders finished including Reinhard Gorantes and Joseph Servino of Patrol 117 who sustained bruises after a spill caused by the rain-soaked road.

Stage 2 will be a team time trial from Daraga, Albay to Naga City, Camarines Sur covering 91.2 km.

Tyson status questionable

LOS ANGELES—Mike Tyson is listening to offers from Don King, the wily promoter the fighter vowed never to work with again, and his status is questionable for a June 21 fight card here that also includes Lennox Lewis.

Tyson was to have signed a deal to face Oleg Maskaev of Kazakhstan at the 18,000-seat Staples Center on the same night Britain's Lewis makes a return to the ring after more than a year's layoff to face Canadian Kirk Johnson.

But Shelly Finkel, Tyson's manager, confirmed to boxing web site MaxBoxing that Tyson was listening to offers from King despite the fact Tyson is suing King for 100 million dollars in a case scheduled to go to trial in September.

Tyson reportedly has offered Tyson up to $20 million to drop the lawsuit and renew their alliance from a decade ago, one that ended with Tyson suing King over money he says was wrongfully taken from 1990s purses.

Tyson has been named a possible foe for World Boxing Council champion Lewis as well as Roy Jones, the light-heavyweight champion who won the World Boxing Association heavyweight title from King-backed fighter John Ruiz last month.

Losing Tyson would take much of the luster from the Lewis-Johnson

Mavs push Blazers on the brink

WASHINGTON—The Dallas Mavericks pushed the Portland Trail Blazers to the brink of elimination from the National Basketball Association playoffs on Friday, as San Antonio and Orlando edged ahead in their first-round series.

Germany's Dirk Nowitzki scored 16 of his 42 points in the fourth quarter as the Mavericks took a commanding 3-0 lead in their Western Conference first-round series with a 115-103 victory over the Blazers in Portland.

Dallas has won nine straight first-round games and sent Portland to its 10th consecutive postseason loss. The Mavericks can wrap up a third straight trip to the conference semi-finals with a win on Sunday.

After trailing throughout, Portland got two free throws from Zach Randolph with 32 seconds left in the third quarter to take its first lead at 85-84. That only served as a wakeup call for Nowitzki, who fell just shy of his team playoff-record 46-point effort in Game One.

Nowitzki made his first five shots of the fourth quarter, including a three-pointer for a 94-89 advantage with eight minutes remaining. He hit another shot from beyond the arc for a 99-93 lead with 6:32 to go.

After a free throw by Portland's Ruben Patterson, Nowitzki again found himself open on the perimeter and drilled another three-pointer as Rasheed Wallace flew by to give the Mavericks a 102-94 edge. It prompted a 20-second timeout by the Trail Blazers.

The break did nothing to slow Nowitzki, who dunked off a feed from Nick Van Exel and completed a three-point play for a 107-95 cushion with 5:10 to play.

Ruben Patterson scored 18 of his playoff career-high 19 points in the first half for Portland, which has not won in the post-season since defeating the Los Angeles Lakers in Game Six of the 2000 conference finals.

Spurs 99, Suns 86

In Phoenix, San Antonio also relied on a European import as France's Tony Parker scored 29 points to lead the Spurs to a 99-86 victory over the Suns.

Dominated by Stephon Marbury in the first two games of their Western Conference first-round series, Parker this time filled the scoring gap left as the Suns limited Spurs forward Tim Duncan to 11 points on 3-of-6 shooting.

Duncan, a Most Valuable Player candidate, still nabbed 23 rebounds to help San Antonio control the glass 51-35.

Stephen Jackson added 20 points and Malik Rose had 15 for the Spurs, who regained home-court advantage and took a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Parker, who totaled nine points in the first two games, scored 13 in the first quarter as San Antonio opened a 25-18 lead.

Jackson put the Spurs ahead for good, 10-8, with a jumper with 7:23 left in the period.

The Spurs extended the lead to 53-36 at halftime and took a 69-56 advantage into the fourth quarter.

Replay will be at 8 p.m.

They were in front by as many as 21 points early in the final period before Phoenix pulled within 10 in the last two minutes.

Marbury scored 25 points, Shawn Marion chipped in 18 and NBA Rookie of the Year Amare Stoudemire 17 for the Suns, but the rest of the team combined for just 26.

Magic 89, Pistons 80

In Orlando, Tracy McGrady's Magic teammates finally gave their superstar some help in an 89-80 victory over Eastern Conference top seeds Detroit.

McGrady scored 29 points but received plenty of offensive support as the Magic took a 2-1 lead in the series.

Darrell Armstrong chipped in 20 points and Drew Gooden had 15 before fouling out with 1:11 left for the Magic, who got 46 from McGrady but just 31 from the rest of the team in Wednesday's game two defeat.

"The last game was unacceptable, with Tracy scoring 46 and the rest of us scoring what we did," Gooden said.

In Orlando's victory in the series opener, McGrady scored 43 points and his teammates combined for 56.

After Richard Hamilton's jumper gave Detroit a 54-53 lead with 8:04 left in the third quarter, rookie Gordan Giricek countered with a three-pointer to give the Magic the lead for good and spark a 14-2 run.

McGrady's dunk with 3:12 to go in the period capped the run, during which Giricek contributed eight points. He scored all of his 10 points in the third quarter.

ORLANDO, Florida—The Orlando Magic, a one-man show? Hardly.

Two days after being collectively outscored by teammate Tracy McGrady, Orlando's supporting cast provided the superstar guard with the help he needed as the Magic defeated the Detroit Pistons 89-80 Friday night to take a 2-1 lead in their first-round playoff series.

Backing up McGrady's 29 points was Darrell Armstrong's 20 points, eight assists and six rebounds, and Drew Gooden's 15 points and seven rebounds. Gordan Giricek snapped out of a slump to score 10 points, all in a crucial third-quarter burst.

"For those guys to play like that, man, that can carry us a long way in the playoffs," said McGrady, who fell short of a third straight 40-point game.

"I told them (Thursday) to go out there and play the game, don't change it for me. And they did a great job of that.

"If they continue to play like that, I really don't have to do much."

In a loss at Detroit on Wednesday, McGrady had 46 points and everyone else 31. That embarrassment made the Game 3 victory sweeter for Armstrong.

Ridiculous

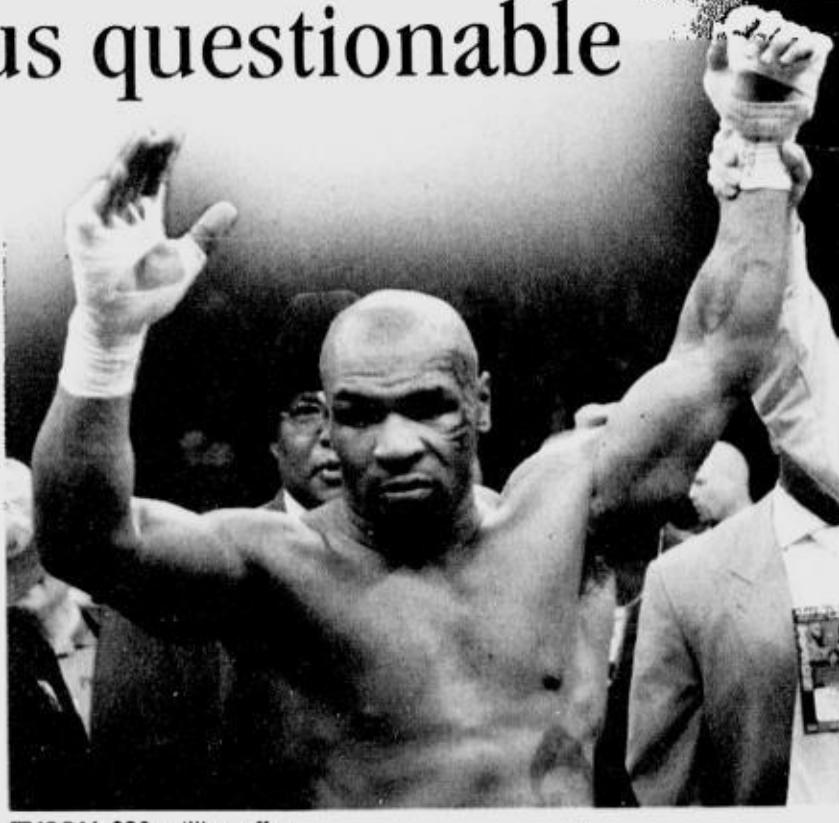

"It's ridiculous when you hear people talk about this as a one-man team," said Armstrong, who made his first five shots. "He's definitely our guy, definitely the guy who got us here—but other guys are setting picks to get him open, too."

For Detroit, Richard Hamilton scored 22 points on 7-of-22 shooting while Corliss Williamson added 16 off the bench. Ben Wallace set a playoff career-best with 22 rebounds.

The Pistons shot 50 percent, turning the ball over 14 times and shooting seven shots blank. Chauncey Billups, though in the third quarter, had five points with five assists.

"You're not going to Orlando if you can't go somewhere in the (NBA) (shooting percentage). Rick Carlisle said shooting 48 for the losing number for us."

Orlando forged its way through the first two consecutive post-seasons as a 3-pointer, Gordan Giricek hit another shot in the fourth quarter, and his team clash, which the Staples Center reportedly paid more than seven million dollars to land.

The site was finalized only after California state athletic officials agreed in principle to award Tyson a license to fight in the state, something he was denied in New Jersey.

Tyson, reportedly set to receive $7 million to fight here, said he needs at least another tuneup fight before considering a big-money rematch with Lewis, who knocked out Tyson in the eighth round last June in Memphis.

Ticket prices were not announced for the fight because they will rise if Tyson is added to the card. Those sales are set to begin May 3, Tyson's fate must be decided within a week. AFP

Arizona pitcher banned

NEW YORK—Arizona Diamondbacks pitcher Miguel Batista was suspended for 10 games and fined an undisclosed amount for inciting a bench-clearing brawl by throwing a ball at the head of batter Tino Martinez.

Major League Baseball vice-president Bob Watson handed down the punishment here Friday as part of a host of banishments in the wake of last Sunday's brawl between the Diamondbacks and the St. Louis Cardinals.

Batista has appealed the suspension and kept his place in the rotation for a Friday game against the New York Mets.

Martinez was suspended four games and fined an undisclosed amount for charging the mound and fighting. He also is expected to appeal.

Reliever Jeff Fassero was suspended three games and fined an undisclosed amount for intentionally throwing and hitting Luis Gonzalez after a warning had been issued. His suspension is scheduled to begin Wednesday.

St. Louis manager Tony La Russa was suspended one game and fined

NEW YORK—Mike Mussina became major league baseball's first five-game winner on Friday as he pitched eight innings to lead the New York Yankees to a 3-2 win over the Texas Rangers.

Mussina, who became the first Yankees starter to begin a season 5-0 since current pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre 34 years ago, allowed one run and five hits before being pulled for the final inning.

The Yankees' win was built on Nick Johnson's two-run homer in the fifth inning, while rookie Colby Lewis took the loss for the Rangers, allowing three runs and six hits in six innings.

Meanwhile, Casey Fossum gave up five hits in seven innings and three runs as the Yankees eased to a 5-2 win.

Fossum walked five on the way over Anaheim in the eighth inning.

Agassi keeps rolling, nears No. 1 ranking

HOUSTON, Texas—Andre Agassi moved within one win of the world No. 1 spot after crushing qualifier Ricardo Mello 6-0, 6-1 at the US Clay Court championships on Friday.

Agassi, who will knock Lleyton Hewitt off the top of the rankings if he beats Mardy Fish or Jurgen Melzer in the semi-finals on Saturday, took just 43 minutes to overpower Mello.

"To be number one at all is a great accomplishment, so I would certainly feel rewarded in that," the top-seeded American told the Association of Tennis Professionals' (ATP) official website.

"But for me, being number one is also the result of playing the best tennis and improving it day after day. Over a 52-week period, to reach number one would be nice."

Agassi, the Australian Open champion, completed his 21st victory in 22 matches this year.

American James Blake, the No. 3 seed, suffered an upset defeat when he lost 6-4, 6-7, 6-1 to French qualifier Olivier dropped just five games in his first three matches this week.

The Las Vegas native hopes to improve upon last year's semi-final performance here, where he lost in straight sets to long-time rival Pete Sampras.

Agassi awaits the winner of Friday night's quarter-final between compatriot Mardy Fish and Austria's Jurgen Melzer. Fish will be making his third quarter-final appearance of the season.

A year ago, Blake was beaten in the quarter-finals by eventual champion Andy Roddick, who is the second seed this week.

The 23-year-old Blake has dropped three straight quarter-final matches. Last month, he lost to Argentina's Mariano Zabaleta at Scottsdale and Brazil's Gustavo Kuerten at Indian Wells.

"I was tentative on the big points," Blake said. "I did not play with confidence. I was hoping that he would miss, which you can't do. Maybe in the juniors or in college that works, but not in the professional game. AFP

Gustafson up at Eagles; Delasin 3 strokes behind

STOCKBRIDGE, Georgia—Sophie Gustafson is on her way to creating more good memories at the Eagles Landing Country Club.

Gustafson fired a six-under-par 66 in rainy conditions Friday and grabbed a two-shot lead in the Chick-fil-A Charity Championship before opening-round play was suspended.

Cristie Kerr and Denise Killeen shot four-under 68s.

Deb Richard and Australia's Karrie Webb were four-under on the course, Richard through nine holes and Webb through 10.

Fil-Am Dorothy Delasin started strong with a 69 while Jennifer Rosales scored a 71.

A 29-year-old Swede who resides in Chicago, Gustafson recorded her first LPGA Tour win at this event in 2000. The following year, she lost a playoff to countrywoman Annika Sorenstam but eclipsed the 1 million-dollar mark in career earnings.

Asked what she likes about the Eagles Landing course, Gustafson replied, "I don't know, really. I have some really good memories from here."

Gustafson eagled the 474-yard second hole and made five birdies to offset a lone bogey in her second sub-70 in 16 rounds this season.

"I hit almost every fairway and almost every green, and I don't think that I made too many mistakes," she said.

Half of the 144-player field was on the course when play was halted. The tournament had been pushed back for about four and a half hours after nearly two inches of rain fell overnight.

"I actually got up this morning and I didn't think we were going to play," Kerr said. "I was in the fitness room this morning, trying to start my normal routine and looking at the Weather Channel, and I didn't think there was any way we'd get nine holes done. You ask anybody, they thought it was going to be a wash until the forecast changed."

Gustafson is glad it did.

She reached the green with a three-wood at the par-five second hole and rolled in a 60-foot eagle putt, then used her eight-iron to sandwich birdies at the third and 12th holes around a bogey at No. 4.

On the back nine, Gustafson chipped within 20 feet to set up a birdie at the 515-yard 13th hole, left a sand wedge just four feet from the cup at No. 14 and blasted out of a bunker at the 18th hole before making her fifth birdie.

Kerr has an idea why Gustafson is so successful at this 6,368-yard, par-72 layout.

"She's extremely long and she's a great player," Kerr said. "She's won a couple times, she's won here before. She had a great history on this golf course. That definitely helps." Michelle Wie, a 13-year-old Hawaiian who was in contention at the Nabisco Championship, got in just five holes and was one-under.

Longhitter Kuehne fires 64, ties Couples, Calcavecchia

HUMBLE, Texas—Hank Kuehne, a former US Amateur champion who has struggled since turning professional, shot an eight-under-par 64 Friday to gain a share of the lead after the second round of the rain-delayed Houston Open.

Kuehne, meanwhile, got off to a good start for the second straight game. Shooting over the Magic's shorter guards, Hamilton had 13 points in the quarter as Detroit led 29-19 at the period's end.

Despite the Magic's early troubles scoring, shooting wasn't a problem—and that's what carried them to a 48-46 halftime lead.

Asked what she likes about the Eagles Landing course, Gustafson replied, "I don't know, really. I have some really good memories from here."

sets ample support

in joy when the Pistons called time-out.

"A lot of it is confidence," said Giricek, who was slumping entering the playoffs. "I finally made a shot, then two, then three, and then you know you have your confidence back."

Fueling Orlando's 10-0 breakout was Armstrong's on-the-ball defense to force four straight turnovers. The Magic soon extended their lead to 67-56, and the Pistons never came within six points from there.

Offense

In the second half, Detroit shot 32 percent with 11 turnovers. The Pistons were so inept on offense, they only outscored Orlando by a point in the fourth quarter despite holding the Magic to two field goals.

"We probably stopped doing the little things, helping each other get open, getting something on the weak side and things like that," said Hamilton, who shot 2-for-11 after the break.

Orlando tried to get McGrady's teammates involved early through a deliberate style, out of character for the East's second-most potent offense. The halfcourt sets failed more often than not, and in the opening six minutes the Magic had five turnovers and McGrady had only one shot as they fell behind 15-6.

Hamilton, meanwhile, got off to a good start for the second straight game. Shooting over the Magic's shorter guards, Hamilton had 13 points in the quarter as Detroit led 29-19 at the period's end.

Torion's typhoon of his life

OUR Dennis U. Eroa christened him Typhoon Torion. That was when Jimwell Torion was still playing in the PBL - the PBL being Dennis' beat for as long as one can remember.

I liked the tag. Still do. Very appropriate. Aside from possessing a distinctly active sound that rhymes with his name, it really aptly describes Jimwell's brand of play: More than the razzle-dazzle type, Jimwell moves swiftly as in a super typhoon ravaging, savaging, an island. But when Jimwell got to the PBA, that moniker was never to be heard of again. I wonder why our sportscasters did not pick that up.

I had forgotten all about that. Until yesterday, when Jimwell Torion hit the headlines. Like a typhoon wreaking havoc on a hapless, tiny island down South. This time, though, the havoc was on him.

"It was just one night of indiscretion," said Torion by way of explaining why he was found positive for shabu (an illegal drug) some days back.

You do a million good things and that's just fine. You do a single bad thing and you are, well, almost doomed.

Jimwell's indiscretion netted him an indefinite suspension. Meaning, the Red Bull Thunder will have to rest for a while. The PBA said he would have to be rehabilitated. Of which I fully agree. Shabu is a far more dangerous drug than marijuana - if marijuana can be considered drug; in some countries, like The Netherlands, marijuana can be had by anyone and is not a banned smoke. But that's another story. And lest you've started thinking about foolish things, I never use marijuana. Never ever tasted it for the life of me.

Jimwell Torion is a case that should be handled well as the PBA's image has been tarnished only a while back when two Fil-Am's were found positive for marijuana use. Both were suspended for two games, a penalty that drew jeers from hardliners who called it "too light a punishment."

I must commend Tony Chua, the Red Bull manager, for having an open mind

SPECTATOR

Al S. Mendoza

about the Torion case.

"When I confronted him (Torion) about the findings," said Tony of Jimwell, "he was apologetic and readily admitted his mistakes. He did not try to fool me by offering excuses."

Torion was found positive for shabu use after attending a party in Cebu City following a Red Bull-Talk N Text game in that southern capital some days back.

"I tried to get him to admit he is a drug-user so that we could help him cure it," said Tony. "But he insisted he was not a drug addict. He said he was sorry and apologized to the team, the league and the PBA fans."

Chua said that Red Bull will never condone Torion's act and will follow "to the letter" the decision of the PBA suspending Jimwell indefinitely.

Said Chua: "Torion is a valuable member of our team, but the Batang Red Bull management is taking appropriate action against him because we believe our players should serve as role models for the youth. We are behind the PBA in its crusade against illegal drugs and drug-use and will fully cooperate in all its programs towards that end."

If only that sentiment goes beyond the fight against drug users in the league as to say all team owners must also be prudent always and sincere enough when handling cases of suspected Fil-Shams, then the return of the PBA's old glory should not be far behind.

Always, it is not bad to yearn for the return of the good ole times, as in us going to the town plaza at night to watch Cortal movies under starlit skies.

What is bad is not to have yearned at all.

First Gentleman Cup race unfolds May 11

Where the track is safer

BECAUSE local track marvel Wind Blown is sure to run in it, the First Gentleman Silver Cup is suddenly thrust into the limelight.

There were speculations that Hermie Esguerra's pambata won't be raced in the event because it has earlier been scheduled at the controversial San Lazaro Leisure Park.

But all doubts as to Wind Blown's participation were erased only a couple of days back when the third FGSC was moved to the Santa Ana Park where, most horseowners agreed, the track is "safer" than the one located in Carmona, Cavite.

Esguerra himself assured the bayang karerista that Wind Blown is joining the race honoring Mike Arroyo. "Wind Blown is one hundred percent sure of running in that race," he said. "He's always ready as long as the track does not pose any danger."

A few weeks back, the INQUIRER came out with an exclusive story on the horseowners' plea for the Santa Ana management to repair its track following a spate of accidents that claimed the lives of five horses, including Esguerra's prized colt With Distinction.

My Silip Boy said that the Philippine Racing Club Inc., which manages Santa Ana, acted on the request at once and did the necessary repair, paving the way for the smooth holding of the races at the Makati venue.

So on May 11 (instead of the May 4 schedule at the SLLP), Wind Blown is flexing his muscles again with a mission to win the P1.7 million FGSC for the third consecutive year.

See you all at "The Park."

My panganay Erika Mae, whom I named after my idol Eric Clapton, turned 15 yesterday.

THE PHILIPPINE Charity Sweepstakes Office officially approved yesterday the request of the Manila Jockey Club Inc. for the holding of the third First Gentleman Silver Cup race from the San Lazaro Leisure Park in Carmona, Cavite to the Santa Ana Park in Makati.

PCSO's decision was also authorized by the Philippine Racing Commission in coordination with the MJCI and the Philippine Racing Club which manages the Santa Ana Park. MJCI has formally asked the PCSO to transfer the race venue as a concession to an earlier request for the possible holding of the PCSO Presidential Gold Cup, the country's most prestigious horse race, at the San Lazaro Leisure Park in December.

This year's First Gentleman's Silver Cup, with a total pot of P1.7 million, will have champion galloper Wind Blown as main attraction.

"The running of the First Gentleman's Silver Cup is part of the PCSO's commitment to support the local horse racing industry by providing the ideal venue to highlight the champions of the sport, as well as, to underscore the industry's vital economic and social contribution," said PCSO chair Ma. Lilia "Honeygirl" de Leon.

As part of the PCSO Silver Cup tradition, First Gentleman Jose Miguel "Mike" Arroyo will be the event's honoree.

Wind Blown, seeking an unprecedented third straight Silver Cup win, heads the stellar cast in the 2,050-meter race.

Hermie Esguerra's prized galloper will carry the weight of 62 kgs. under the hands of Fernando Raquel Jr.

Challenging Wind Blown are Perfect Storm, Lyonnais, Golden Ballet, Sparkling Sky, Hyperbird and Kitty Hawk.

Coseteng aims to pad lead

JODY Coseteng aims to extend his lead in the premier Super A class when the fifth and sixth rounds of the 2003 SVI-Grand Prix unfold at the Subic International Raceway today.

Coseteng, the defending champion and star rider of Caltex-Havoline, has compiled a four-round total of 26 points based on the 10-6-4-3-2-1 scoring system, just a point ahead of his nearest pursuer in the centerpiece event.

Last season's Driver of the Year had a near flawless run in the third round total of the series, but suspension problems prevented him finishing the fourth round.

But due to the enormous lead he compiled in the first three rounds, the resilient Coseteng still managed to keep the lead.

"We're expecting a smoother run on Sunday," said Coseteng. "Problems arise in the most unusual way but we're trying to limit them at the minimum. The important thing is preparation, and we have plenty of that."

NEW CEO OF NYSE-LISTED FIRM IS FILIPINA

She never dreamed of going into business

By Margie Quimpo-Espino

A FRIEND once reminded Angelica Urra-Berrie of that time long ago when they would get together and think of businesses to get into. Her friend said Angie would bring all sorts of novelty and gift items and point them out as possibilities.

Berrie says she had forgotten about those days but realizes now that they were a portent of things to come.

Berrie, a Visayan, is the new chief executive officer of the 40-year-old Russ Berrie and Company of the US, makers of gift items like plush toys (or stuff toys), mugs, home decors. It is listed at the New York Stock Exchange.

(The products are distributed in the Philippines by Gift Gate.)

The firm was named after its founder, Russ Berrie, who passed away last Dec. 25, at the age of 69. He was the husband of Angie.

"My husband was diabetic for 19 years," says the 48-year-old, although Russ Berrie died of a heart attack. "My husband hoped he could build a succession team, a management team. We always thought it was somebody else who would take his place. But he told me if something happens you'll have to make the decision."

She says it never occurred to ANGELICA Urra-Berrie amid the plush items or stuff toys which comprise 45 percent of Russ' sales.

CHITO VECINA

her that she would take over her husband's post. When Berrie died, a management team took over but after a month the board of Russ appointed Angie as CEO.

It has been a daily grind for Angie since her husband died. "When Russ died I worked every day. I would wake up at four and leave for the gift show in Atlanta then fly back the same day. This is my first real break."

Angie was in Manila recently to be with her father who had a scheduled bypass operation at the Asian Hospital.

She admits that her new post is daunting. She had to fill her husband's shoes immediately.

"I was in the board for four years and I was VP for strategic planning. The transition was a natural thing for the customers and the stockholders. There was no bleep in the stocks after he died," she says.

She admits it has been quite intimidating to be the only female member of the board.

"The big boys' language is more corporate. Women are not trained to speak in the corporate language. Our management style is intuitive. We say 'I feel, I think.' Men say 'I believe, I want.'

"You have to be aware of how to send the right signals. You have to project bigger. You start communicating globally," she says.

Angie says Russ was her mentor. Since they were married 11 years ago, they have been together 24/7. She says their honeymoon was spent doing store research. When they travel, they make sure they find a Russ item in the places they go to. So far, the only place they did not find one was in Tahiti.

How she met Russ

They met when Russ came to Manila and got to know Angie, who was then one of Russ Berrie's suppliers. She is the fourth wife of Russ who has six children from previous marriages.

She moved to the US to join Russ and left her business with a brother who was eventually "pirated" by Russ. Angie was in the papier mache exports business.

While her husband was hands-on in running the company he started with $500, Angie says her style "is to stir people."

"My style is if we do this what would happen? Are we building succession in the various departments?" she says.

She says this was her training as head of strategic planning—look at things as a whole.

Sachet technology makes ex-tricycle driver worth millions

By Carmel Tong-Mosura
Contributor

DID you know that the man who introduced us to the sachet is the same one who leads the city of Antipolo?

He is the same man who once drove a tricycle to make ends meet for his family.

Humble beginnings led to Mayor Angelito Gatlabayan's breakthrough idea. After graduating with a Bachelor of Science in Chemical Engineering from Adamson University and marrying his wife Josefina, Gatlabayan took a job as a tricycle driver to support his family.

"Driving a tricycle is a difficult job and it gave me the challenge to get a degree and earn not with the muscle but with the brain."

He met an accident while driving his tricycle once and the experience made him think very hard about the future. It was then that he dreamed up the concept that would revolutionize the retail industry: sachet packaging.

A money-saving blessing for singles, travelers and people with limited income, Gatlabayan, the chemist, formulated the use of sachet packs for shampoos, conditioners, flavoring and even pre-mixed coffee.

Sachets were earlier believed to be too difficult to formulate for single-serve packages. He then sold the concept to firms engaged in packaging products intended for single use.

But before shaking the foundations of the industry with this revolutionary idea, Gatlabayan jumpstarted a career in laminated film and plastic packaging of snack foods, juice, coffee and shampoo when he joined Philippine Cellophane Film Corp. as OIC of the Technical Services Department. From there, he became the operations manager for Reliable Contract Manager where his talent and creativity were honed.

His phenomenal climb as president of Macstrat Inc. in the Packaging Philippine Division sealed his fate and his expertise in packaging.

The ultimate feather to his cap was being hired as a regional director for Asia, operation of Nagai Package Co. Ltd., a subsidiary of NP Group of Companies in Osaka, Japan, with offices in Manila, Bangkok, Jakarta and Singapore.

He embarked on a creative career in packaging with a concept attuned to the Filipino consumer's style emphasizing affordability.

For some time, he mulled the concept of selling products in small quantities so that the average Juan can buy what he needs only for the moment.

When the idea caught the fancy of the manufacturers, Gatlabayan started to market his creation to package most of the consumer products in sachets such as snack food, juice, coffee, creamer, shampoo, conditioner and many others.

Companies started to produce their products with the "masa" in mind for after all, they are the largest consumers in the country.

"I never thought I'd reach this far. As a young man, my only dream was to have a college degree, get a job and provide for my family," he said.

But as fate would have it, he was destined to do great things, to make life better for others.

His ideas have definitely helped marginalized Filipinos purchase products with just a few pesos. Instead of buying a bottle of shampoo, which may cost about P40 and up, a consumer need only spend P5-P6 a sachet to get a decent bath for a day.

From the concept of "ingi" to a trend in packaging, Gatlabayan has started a trend. Today, he would just sit back, relax and watch the royalties come pouring in. He also diversified his business from packaging to real estate and other enterprises locally as well as in other countries in Asia. He explains, "If there are at least one million Filipinos using shampoo and conditioner in one day, that's how much I will earn that particular day."

It is the same fertile and creative mindset that governs his concepts for his hometown of Antipolo, Rizal, for which he has served as mayor since May of 1998.

Shepherding Antipolo into cityhood for five years now, Mayor Gatlabayan has dedicated his stewardship toward making his city a must-see tourist destination, keeping true to its age-old distinction as the Philippines' "Pilgrimage City."

The authors reveal that the best way to develop lasting relationships with consumers is to "relate to their values and support what is important in their lives."

"Priceless"
By Diana LaSalle and Terry Britton
Harvard Business School Press, 2003

By Dante M. Velasco

PERFECT marketing strategies are never written in granite. The quest for the best and most effective way to win the heart and mind—and now the soul—of the customer is endless.

A book was written about how Hallmark established "emotional touchpoints" with its customers—and made loyalty a cradle-to-grave virtue.

Philip Kotler revised his four P's in marketing as he acknowledged the presence of "networked marketing" that refuses to be segmented.

Michael Hammer volunteered ET-BW—or "easy-to-do-business—with." Each attempt at taking a second—or in other—look at the customer draws us closer to the heart—nay, the soul—of the customer.

"Classical marketing" (an oxymoron) has been taking a beating, we know, including the durable distinction between "product features" and "product benefits."

The book, simply titled "Priceless," recommends: "The focus must now shift to what a product or service offers and how it affects customers' lives." In other words, make the customer "experience" your product.

The book presents what it calls "value experience"—delivering value with unforgettable events that therefore enable the product to transcend the ordinary to become extraordinary—or priceless. Therefore, it is no longer a product that you buy; it's a product that is part of a meaningful experience.

How do you create "value experience"?

The authors reveal that the best way to develop lasting relationships with consumers is to "relate to their values and support what is important in their lives."

The book cites a small business that has made a transition and delivered value to its customers: Deerpath Medical Associates, a group of specialists in Northern Illinois. "What sets Deerpath apart is its focus on making it easy to be cared for," the authors say. Deerpath's offices open at 7 a.m., and even allow walk-in patients to be attended to in a few minutes by specialists ranging from allergists to ophthalmologists.

Locally, McDonald's introduced the "60-second Challenge," where counter attendants respond to customers within 60 seconds or less.

In business, what is experience? The book prefacing its answer with this: "An experience cannot happen without the customer's involvement." The operative word is "engagement."

The book offers the "Experience Engagement Process (EEP)." It allows consumers to discover, evaluate, acquire, integrate and extend. Adapted from a consumer decision-making model by Johan Arndt, EEP outlines the stages customers go through—thus uncovering the real value of an offering.

The first stage, to discover, happens when consumers "identify products and services to meet specific wants and needs, and uncover possible sources for them." The need or impulse to buy something may be company-induced—for instance, the latest Coke TVC inspires customers to join the "Hottah Hottah" rave.

It can also be self-induced—a yuppie decides he needs a new mobile phone with GPRS and an MP3 player. Or it can be situation-induced—when your ever-dependable laptop that stores practically everything bugs down.

The next step, to evaluate, engages the consumers to "process" the KSFs (key success factors) of products before finally making the decision to buy. This is a critical moment, because the customer may just shift his attention somewhere after "evaluation." Hook him with experiencing your offering beyond the usual after sales service or free installation.

After evaluating the product, customers acquire it. This is the defining moment. He fishes out cash or shows his credit card. But, wait. The customer may yet change his or her mind. If your product has the style but not the color, then the ubiquitous competitor is ever ready to grab your customer by the hand. So, experience marketing must "hold the customer to the very end."

Upon acquisition, customers now integrate the goods into their lives. As the authors point out, it is the "process of making something a part of the whole." Your job doesn't end with every purchase—it has just begun. A personalized service, an attractive packaging—that has lasting value—may yet cement the relationship. You create "valuable integration experience" for customers.

The decision to repurchase is to extend the EEP. According to the authors, "This is the stage where company and customer form a bond beyond mere ownership or use of a product or a service."

Customers today are complex and are often moved by social events. For them, this is far beyond achieving satisfaction and brand loyalty. For companies, this is "reaching for the soul of the consumer" and, ultimately, seeing the value through the customer's eyes. (dantenv@i-next.net)

Oil firm backs Panglao 2003 coral reef project

TOTALFinaElf Philippines (TFE Philippines) supports Panglao 2003, an international marine biodiversity project slated in May this year.

Citing the Philippines as among the world's most fascinating areas for coastal ecosystems study, marine experts from 15 nations all over the globe will visit the Bohol province to embark on the project that aims, among others, to shed light on marine species diversity on a global scale.

The project's main proponents are TotalFinaElf Foundation and the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The other groups supporting the project are Conservation International and the Asean Regional Center for Biodiversity Conservation in collaboration with the University of San Carlos in Cebu City.

In line with its parent company's commitment to the protection of coastal ecosystems, TFE Philippines has pledged its support for the project whose beginnings dates back to 1992, when TotalFinaElf Foundation found thousands of marine species in the exotic sites of New Caledonia.

Similar studies followed in 2000 at Loyalty

Islands in Lifou and in Rapa (Australes archipelago) in 2002. The project culminates in Panglao, which is considered to hold a key position at the heart of the Indo-Pacific species richness gradient.

A team of 75 international marine experts will conduct the 45-day fieldwork from May to July 2003 to acquire new scientific knowledge on the richness of Philippine marine species. Panglao 2003 is led by senior professors Dr. Philippe Bouchet of the French National Museum and Dr. Danilo Largo, Biology department chair of the University of San Carlos in Cebu.

Participants in the study are composed of marine scientists, professors, students, divers, technicians and volunteers from 15 countries namely Austria, Belgium, Italy, Australia, Russia, Singapore, Sweden, Taiwan, France, New Caledonia, Norway, Spain, Philippines, Thailand, Vietnam and the United States. Additionally, local institutions like the Philippine National Museum and the Marine Science Institute of the University of the Philippines will participate.

Panglao is located at the west portion of Bohol's capital, Tagbilaran City.

Frenchman plays David to Starbucks Goliath

PARIS—When Philippe Bloch came up with a plan to sell take-away café lattés to picky Parisians used to shots of eye-popping espresso, his bankers balked and traditional French café owners called him crazy.

"You can't reinvent a business as old as the French café," quipped one rival at the opening of the first Columbus Café in central Paris back in 1994.

Nearly a decade later, the energetic Frenchman and his partner Ralph Hababou have built up a chain of over 30 coffee bars and more are on the way.

But their success in winning over Parisians with a distinctly American-style coffee concept has not come easily and their struggle offers some clues on why Seattle-based java giant Starbucks is still steering clear of France, some 20 years after US fast-food icon McDonald's set up shop here.

In a new book, Bloch describes his crusade to create Columbus Café—a tale of battles with French bureaucrats, disheartening meetings with investors and even a trip to court where he was admonished by a French judge for trying to be "too American."

Like McDonald's, which took the better part of a decade to turn a profit in France, Columbus is only now reaching the break even point.

But after years of flirting with failure, the chain and its flavored lattés, brownies and muffins is winning fans—vindication for Bloch, who put a successful consultant career on hold after falling in love with an American-style espresso bar on Columbus Avenue in New York in 1993.

"Culturally we are beginning to win our battle," Bloch said. "The concept is beginning to become a part of everyday life."

He expects the chain's revenues to rise by more than 50 percent this year to approach 10 million euros.

A new flagship store opened in Paris this month. Bloch expects to add at least 10 new cafés in the Paris region by the end of the year.

These figures look pretty paltry compared to the $3.3 billion in sales recorded last year by Starbucks, which now counts over 6,000 cafés worldwide.

World of Barbie museum: A place for little girls' dreams

MOST Barbie fans trace their interest back to the excitement of being given their first doll for a birthday or Christmas present.

For over 40 years, Barbie has encapsulated the dreams and imaginations of girls worldwide with her timeless appeal and the many roles she has fitted into.

A girl of four and a mother of forty share the same interest during their own childhood days. But one wonders the difference of their Barbie dolls with their generation gap. Barbie's trends and style differs from every era.

You can now see the look of Barbie from the 1958 doll to the newest line up for 2003. Richwell Trading Corp. and Toy Kingdom celebrates the 44th year of Barbie by launching The World of Barbie museum, exclusively for Toy Kingdom Megamall and Southmall. The museum was officially opened last March 31 in Megamall headed by Ms Lucy Torres-Gomez.

At the entrance of the museum, you will see the newest line up of Barbie, Stylin' Pup Barbie, and her new friend - a playful pup named Ginger. Inside the museum, you will find the 'Birth of Barbie'. Barbie has made her debut in 1959. The 'Barbie's Breakthrough', in which contain the introduction of "Barbie Look" campaign in 1965 marked the beginning of a new life for the doll.

With what collectors often refer to as the "bend-leg era", Barbie's persona, merchandising and fashion went through dramatic changes and became more imaginative. In the 'Barbie and the World Icon', Barbie was made in the image of legends like Marilyn Monroe, Audrey Hepburn and others. The 'Barbie and Her Profession', Barbie's world often reflected the importance of education in preparation for a balance career. The 'Barbie on Tales, Theater and Movies', this section revolves on theater episodes and the world of entertainment.

In the section, 'Barbie and Her Designers', her clothes are inspired by the leading couturiers. Evocations of Dior, Calvin Klein and other famous fashion designers. Barbie also made a cross-cultural journey, in the 'Barbie and the Color of the World.'

In the 'Barbie's four decades of fun, fantasy and fashion', it illustrates the continuing effort to focus the symbiosis of Barbie and fashion in the different era.

Up to date, Barbie has kept her head admirably, testing every possible vocabulary. Her true loyalty, however is to the little girls who have found in her the key to the great game of life: dreams and the world of make-believe.

Barbie will have a series of fun activities and events for the month of May which include the following: The World of Barbie Mall Tour - featuring the lead doll Stylin' Pup Barbie. Little girls will have the chance to meet and greet a live Barbie model. There will also be a portion called the Stylin' Pup segment headed by a pet groomer. The mall tour will be scheduled in the following malls -

THE MUSEUM was formally opened by Lucy Torres Gomez.

SM Bicutan, May 4; SM Pampanga, May 11; SM Bacoor, May 17; SM North Edsa, May 18; SM Megamall, May 25; SM Fairview, May 31.

This activities are the joint efforts of Tender Care and Goldilocks.

RLC TOP SALES PERFORMERS

Robinsons Land Corp. - high rise buildings division headed by its general manager Danilo E. Iglesia (seated, center) and sales and marketing services director Malou T. Meet Tiger Woods, build public schools with the Coca-Cola Golf Classic

IF THE idea of having a personal chat with Tiger Woods in Orlando, Florida doesn't get your golfing juices really flowing, the thought of helping build schoolhouses for rural Filipino public schoolchildren by merely playing the game might.

On May 7, The Coca-Cola Export Corporation in cooperation with Coca-Cola Bottlers Philippines Inc. hosts the "Coca-Cola Golf Classic" at the Langer and Couples championship courses of the Riviera Golf and Country Club in Silang, Cavite. This major invitational tournament is part of an umbrella program called Tulay Talino, an education fund drive to benefit the Little Red Schoolhouse Project of the Coca-Cola Foundation Philippines Inc.

A novel feature of the tournament is an auction like no other. There is but one item on the dock: a Tiger Woods-autographed flag used in the 2001 Masters tournament at Augusta, Georgia. The flag, which bears a hologram from the Tiger Woods Foundation attesting to the authenticity of the autograph, will be auctioned to the highest bidder.

This auction is open only to confirmed players from sponsoring firms, and a company is allowed to bid in lieu of an individual. Pre-event bidding will be until May 2, with the final bidding event on the day of the tournament itself during the awards ceremony.

There is also a raffle for all participants of the Coca-Cola Golf Classic, and the prizes to be won are certainly remarkable by any standard. Apart from the grand prize personally meeting Tiger Woods in Florida this October (with Business Class airfare and hotel accommodations for two fully paid for), there are vacation packages for two to Tokyo, Bangkok, Cebu (Shangri-La Mactan) and Boracay (Waling-Waling Beach Hotel).

But for all the wonderful prizes and good cheer, there's a more noble objective behind the Coca-Cola Golf Classic. The tournament will build more "Little Red Schoolhouses" in some of the country's most isolated communities, on sites selected by the Department of Education.

Currently numbering 50, Little Red Schoolhouses are modern public elementary schoolhouses designed for the multi-grade method of teaching endorsed by Unicef as the most cost-efficient means of providing primary education to as many children as possible.

"The Coca-Cola Golf Classic gives us an opportunity to expand our community initiatives in the Philippines," said Coca-Cola Foundation Philippines Inc. president Cecile L. Alcantara. "It is also a way to convey our gratitude for the support these community initiatives have received from the Philippine government. Through programs like Tulay Talino, we are delighted and honored to continue giving back to the communities we serve."

Leading names in business and industry have signed on as corporate sponsors of the Coca-Cola Golf Classic. To date, these include San Miguel Corporation, PLDT/Smart, ABS-CBN, GMA Network, Globe Telecoms, Budget Rent-A-Car, FedEx/U-Freight, Taylor-Made Adidas, Jollibee, SAP Philippines, McCann-Erickson Philippines, NutraSweet Philippines, Manila Peninsula, McDonalds, Ogilvy & Mather, and Guard All-Electronic Security Systems.

A grand reunion

FINALLY, the descendants of the precursors of the movements against the repressive acts of government during the Spanish regime shall have a chance to renew old friendships and recall childhood memories of their forefathers who, by their rebellion, opened the doors of the schools to Filipino women whom the "frailes" wished to consign to ignorance and ignominy. Indeed, Jose Rizal commended them and their vision in his famous letters to the 21 Women of Malolos. The Women of Malolos Foundation Inc. (Womfi) shall honor these 21 women with the grand reunion of their descendants whose families have their roots in Malolos, Bulacan. They include the Reyeses, Tantocos, Tiengsons, Crisostomos, Enriquez, Aldabas, Santoses and Bautistas and their extended families. The reunion shall be held today 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Philippine Army Officers Club in Fort Bonifacio.

NREA fetes new officers

THE NATIONAL Real Estate Association (NREA) fetes its newly inducted officers and trustees to an honor dinner on April 28 starting 6:30 p.m. at Club Filipino, Greenhills, San Juan, Metro Manila. Part of NREA's business meeting for the month, the traditional welcome celebration for the incoming officers will have Agrarian Reform Secretary Roberto "Obet" Pagdanganan as guest of honor and speaker, as announced by architect-urban planner Felino A. Palafax Jr., NREA national president. Pagdanganan is expected to discuss the progress of agrarian reform land distribution, the bill using Certificates of Land Ownership Awards (CLOAs) as loan collateral including the DAR commitment to facilitate the process of converting lands for residential, commercial or industrial uses. For particulars, call 913-4463 and 912-3492.

Oral Comm. seminars

THE CORPORATE Mind presents a series of seminar-workshops to upgrade communications skills: Speaking with Confidence, a seminar-workshop aimed at building, improving and projecting confidence, from April 28 to 30, 6 to 9 p.m. and on May 1, 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.; Rudiments of Public Speaking, May 2 and 3, 5:30 to 9:30 p.m., and Advanced Public Speaking on May 8, 8:30 to 5:30 p.m. and May 10 to 12 from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Manila Galleria Suites on ADB Avenue, Ortigas Center, Pasig City. Highlight of the seminar is the individual assessment of participants and the monitoring of their progress throughout the workshop. Principal lecturer in all seminars is Josephine Gomez. Eyes mirror the soul and the big eyewear business

By Abe Florendo
Contributor

THE EYES are the mirrors of the soul. They also reflect the big business of eyewear. The newest to make a spectacle of this business is Viva International Group, which is launching its three branded products: Harley-Davidson Performance Eyewear, Marc Ecko Scopes and Gant Eyewear in time for summer in the Philippines.

On hand for the debut in the country of these three eyewear brands, which have made their mark in the United States and Europe, was regional director Conrad Blandford. He has been for eight years with Viva International Group, the 25-year-old American company which has offices and direct sales forces in 11 countries and distribution in more than 50 countries.

"We've been 25 years in the US and 12 years in Europe," he says. Last year, Viva International group opened its distribution center in Hong Kong to service South East Asia and Australia. "Fortunately, I've been going around the region for 10 years and I know how it works down here. That helps because when I visit a new market and do research, I would need as long as two years to come to a final point," he says.

The final point in Manila came when he met the head of In-Look Fashion (Phils.) Inc. in Hong Kong. "It was pure coincidence. They were looking to expand their operations in the Philippines at the same time that I was looking to expand in the Philippines," says Blandford. And clinching the deal for both of them was Blandford's strong feeling that "these are the people who at the end of the day I feel comfortable dealing with." Distributorship still works on a very human, feel-good level.

Market positioning

So, how is he positioning his eyewear products in a tropical market that is already wide-eyed with, or even blinded by, them? Looking at the bigger frame, he says, "the presence of very famous names already here dictates where we should go in as well."

Meaning, to go to a level "that will be acceptable to the populace." This level is identified according to the fashion and function of the brand.

Performance eyewear

Harley-Davidson Performance Eyewear, he says, is geared exclusively for men, specifically the motorcycle rider who needs protection for his eyes against dust, sand and wind. But the fashion has shifted from the aesthetics of the rip-roaring Hell's Angels of the '70s to the more sophisticated stylishness of professionals, especially lawyers, who are now, surprisingly, the bigger customers of Harley-Davidson. Why so? Because lawyers and other professionals have more money to afford the pricey Harley Davidson. The motorbike's Milwaukee company itself has changed their global image, from hell-bent to classy, in their eyewear and other items, like leather jackets, they threw in with their motorbikes.

Eponymous brand

Marc Ecko Scopes, the eponymous brand of the popular New York fashion designer, is "great fun, it's for everyone." But with a difference. "In this globalized world that we live in," Blandford says, "everything is available for everyone at any price. But what's exciting about this brand is that every single frame or sunglass is completely different from what you'd normally expect to find in the market. It's so different from what everyone has."

Young and trendy

The Marc Ecko Scopes is designed for a young and trendy market, 16-25 years old, its features including special color lenses, design and size, for today's generation that wears super baggy clothes and dances to hip-hop or rap music, that kind of thing.

The third line of eyewear Viva International Group through its distributor In-Look Fashion is launching in the Philippines is the Gant Eyewear. Originally a Swedish company but with a lot of associations with American style, Gant first introduced their eyewear line 20 years ago. It was only two years ago, however, when Viva International Group took over its manufacturing and marketing.

Its market are men, 35 years old and up. Before Gant Eyewear, says Blandford, nobody was taking care of older people whose eyes as they grow older require thicker prescription lenses.

Gant Eyewear has remedied this neglect of the generation of fading eyesight with excellent designs, matched with the comfort and convenience of lightweight but strong materials, specifically titanium and stainless steel, whose added advantage is that it's all allergy-free.

Lightweight material has been state-of-art technology for eyeglasses since the last few years. "It feels almost like you're wearing nothing."

HARLEY-Davidson

ing," he says. Another innovation is the gradient shade, where Marc Ecko Scopes has been trending. "This season you'll be seeing exciting two-tones, darker at the top and gradually lightening towards the bottom, like silver and bronze, satin gold and brown, platinum and grey-blue or plum and violet."

Acceptable brands

"You are also going to be seeing more of flash silver in sunglasses," says Blandford. It's so called because at certain angles the lenses flash silver.

Of Viva International Group's numerous client brands, why did they choose to bring in Marc Ecko, Harley-Davidson and Gant to the Philippines?

"Our research into the market here has shown that these are the brands that will be acceptable and affordable," says Blandford. In other words, these brands span the bridge between, say, Ray-Ban on one end and Calvin Klein on the other.

The research has been taking him to more airports than he would care to see yet some more. "You have no idea how much I travel," he says, grinning. For instance, for his new Asian market, which is based in Hong Kong, he has been traveling all the way east up to Korea, including China, for the launch in April—by the end of April he expects to have done Vietnam, India and the Philippines—and all the way down south to Australia for a summer launch.

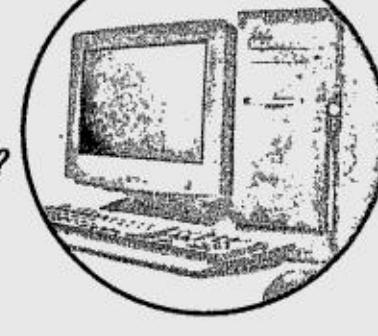

"And that's it for the moment," he sighs, "because sometimes I need to sleep."

But his expectations of his new markets will keep him awake at all hours. He's not pulling his shaded Marc Ecko Scopes over his eyes but he has a silver-flash view of the prospects of the Philippine market.

"A few months from today," he says. "I shall be walking in the Philippines and see Harley-Davidson, Marc Ecko and Gant eyewear in the right stores." And worn by more and more people in the streets.

Booklatan sa Bayan

The Integrated Book Development Program of the National Book Development Board

By Carlo June Panila and Roderick Feliciano

Romelia Payopelin smiles as she recounts those days when she would wake up very early to traverse the rocky meadows of Tapaz and catch the three-hour trip from Capiz to Iloilo City only to buy the latest textbooks for her children.

To the 41-year-old mother of two high-school students and a fifth grader, a small public library or a commercial bookstore located in the nearby Roxas City or in her very hometown Tapaz "will surely be a relief."

"Actually, we have the provincial library in Roxas City where we can read and sometimes borrow books. But most of the reading materials there are too old, dating back as far as the '70s," Payopelin said in Capizeno dialect.

"Besides, Tapaz is very far from the city. It's not practical to travel that far just to see some books. I might as well sell at the talipapa. May income pa," added Payopelin, who has been a widow our own municipal library," disclosed Mayor Romualdo Exmundo Jr. of Tapaz, Mayor Raymund Locsin of President Roxas, and Mayor Heracleo Benjamin of Duamarao.

NBDB's book drive for Capiz amassed not less than 3,000 books in just a month. These books included new and slightly used textbooks, Tagalog novelties, dictionaries, self-help and how-to books, literary anthologies, and even Manila Critics Circle and Gintong Aklat award-winning books.

Booklatan sa Bayan was launched in September last year to jumpstart NBDB's Integrated Book Development Program, which aims to improve the accessibility of books in the provinces, to encourage Filipino authorship, to help the country's library system become more effective, and to improve indigenous technologies utilized in book publishing.

"The program focuses on ca-

Americans, Russians, Japanese, and Germans, who not only received better education than Filipinos then—and up to now—but also enjoyed more affordable books.

According to the NBDB secretariat chief, such data, though culled nine years ago, "is still relatively true today for 80 million Filipinos," who, by and large, place books and reading at the bottom of their priority list.

"The reason behind is not the country's literacy rate but the ridiculously high prices of both imported and locally published books we have here," Cunanan said.

Minowa's study revealed that "book prices in the Philippines were 10 times higher than those in the United States, Russia, Japan, or Germany." The country's heavy dependence on exorbitantly priced imported books (80% of the total books in circulation at that time) largely contributes to the low accessibility of books in the Philippines. "Added to this is the high price of domestically produced books, predominantly school textbooks," the study showed.

While there continues to be a lack of data in the Philippine book market, it is against this backdrop that the NBDB piloted its Booklatan sa Bayan program in the Visayas, specifically in Capiz, where there is an existing network and strong linkages with the local government units.

"The success of this program lies on its sustainability. This isn't just a one-shot thing. Booklatan sa Bayan is a long-term endeavor. That is why we need to have the support of recipient LGUs to ensure that they will nurture whatever we have sown in their locality," Cunanan stressed.

"So far, we have encouraging results. Many municipalities in Capiz have now started their own public libraries," the NBDB executive director said.

In a survey conducted with 697 Booklatan participants and ordinary folks in Capiz, 78% said that the program was relevant, while 22% said otherwise. Forty-five percent also held that the program's implementation was satisfactory, 40% said it was very satisfactory, and 6% deemed it was excellent.

The survey also showed that 58% of those who participated in the program have increased their time in reading books, while 24% became more critical in their choice of the quality of what they read, and 12% have developed some form of awareness on the value of books.

On the other hand, 66% of the Booklatan participants became interested in venturing into book publishing either as an author or as a publisher, while 34% of them were a bit speculative of the idea.

One of the most tangible effects of the program is the establishment of a Libro franchise bookstore in Roxas City. Through the franchise, the owner has been able to consign books from Metro Manila.

A scheme developed by one of NBDB's stakeholders, the Nationwide Book Network, Libro offers a working business model for running a bookstore. It provides the store's operating system, trademark, and technical support from authorities and experts in the Philippine publishing and distribution industry.

All one needs to have a Libro franchise is at least 15-sq.m. store space, bookshelves, an internet-ready computer, and a telefax. Franchise fee is P75,000.00 only, while startup cash is estimated at P250,000.00.

Because of its successful implementation in Capiz, Booklatan sa Bayan—at the request of several local leaders in the different parts of the country—will be replicated in Legaspi City, Albay come May 11 to 17, San Fernando City, La Union and Zamboanga del Sur in July, Davao Oriental in August, and more to come this year.

"We've been receiving requests from mayors and congressmen to do the Booklatan, in their localities," told Cunanan. "They believed in what we do; they believed in what NBDB does," she said while smiling.

Armed with its Booklatan sa Bayan program, NBDB dreams of more Filipinos of all ages and all walks of life enjoying access to and reading a wider selection of quality and cheaper books and related materials. It envisions public libraries and commercial bookstores in every region, province, municipality, and even barangay nationwide.

Yes, the dream of making this country a nation of readers and book lovers may be a bit far off for now, but NBDB has already taken humble yet meaningful strides towards that dream.

(NBDB) was brought to Capiz, only five towns in the entire province of 16 municipalities had a public library and only two commercial bookstores that mostly sold school supplies can be found in the provincial capital.

Now enjoying the accessibility of new and slightly used books in Tapaz' municipal library, Payopelin and her kababayans need not spend time and money to scamper to Iloilo City to get the latest books.

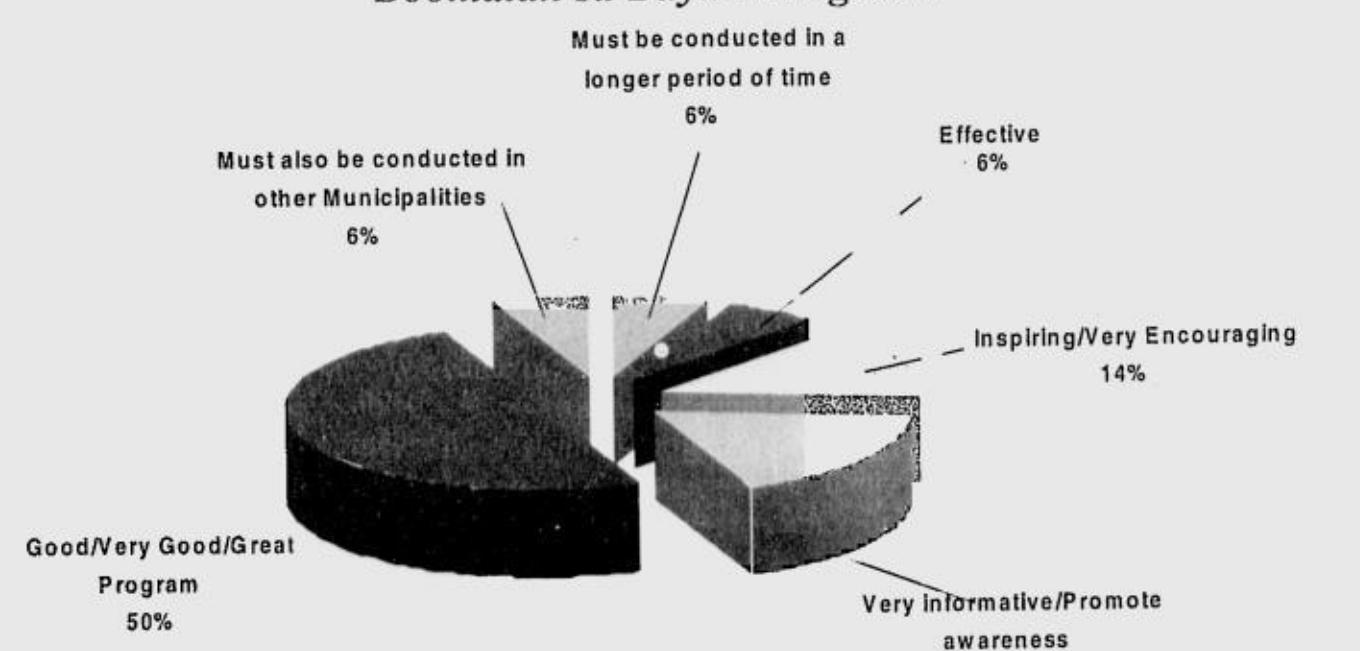

Roxas City and 16 municipalities in Capiz—including Tapaz—received thousands of books accumulated by NBDB through donations from local publishers nationwide. Apart from these, "NBDB also gave us bookshelves, tables, and chairs to start executive Director Gemma Regina Cunanan.

Echoing the government's call for a strong republic, Cunanan believes that "for us to build a thriving democracy, our people should be equipped with the basic tools of literacy" and that "for us to eradicate poverty, we must destroy the roots of ignorance by building, among others, a nation of readers."

In 1994, Prof. Shigeo Minowa of Japan conducted a study on the Philippine book market, and he found out that "all 62 million Filipinos (based on 1990 statistics) can buy only 0.66 books per year given their per capita income." The figure appears ludicrous when compared to the 7.8 books available at that time to

Boracay thrives amid outbreak of SARS

By Sharon Wendy A. Robas

WITH the outbreak of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) in the Asian region including the Philippines now, staying at home would probably be the safest place these days.

But with the scorching heat of the summer, this scenario is unlikely. Besides, what is summer without the sun, sea and sand?

Boracay Island still tops the list as one of the best summer getaways in the Philippines.

In our trip to this island early this month, the place was crowded with tourists, both foreign and local.

Who are the visitors

(Reports say number of visitors even doubled during the Holy Week break.)

Filipinos topped the lists of visitors according to the 2002 records of the office of the Department of Tourism located inside the island.

According to the DOT data, a total of 300,792 tourists visited the island in 2002. This comprised 222,900 domestic tourists and 77,892 foreign visitors.

Judith T. Icotanim, officer in charge of DOT-Boracay field office, shares that among the foreigners.

Koreans topped the list of tourists in Boracay, touted by many as "paradise." Last year, Koreans numbered 47,717 followed by Americans with 5,195.

In January and February of this year, records show Filipinos remain the largest in number followed again by Koreans with 4,340 and 4,586, respectively.

Peak seasons

Peak seasons are January to May and October to December.

Icotanim also shares that although the increase in tourism is not as abrupt as it was in the early '90s, business in Boracay is up compared to previous years.

Most tourists nowadays are pre-booked, noticed Icotanim, adding it is becoming the "trend" among Boracay visitors although there are still few walk-in patrons. Rates are higher during the peak seasons and vary during the lean months.

Boracay Island is composed of more than 200 resorts, which cater to every visitor's taste. The DOT also does a sampling report on the occupancy rate in four establishments classified as Class AAA, AA and A.

Sampling results in 2002 showed the month where the following resorts get high percentage: Boracay Regency (AAA), 84.54 percent in May, Club Panoly (AAA), 49.10 percent, October; Le Soleil de Boracay (AA) 86.64 percent in December; and Villa de Oro (A) 49.15 percent in May.

Boracay Regency recorded more than 50 percent occupancy rates in all the months last year.

Restaurants, bars, etc.

We also noticed that restaurants, bars and stores in Boracay are packed with clients especially at night.

D'Mall de Boracay, a high-end "talipapa" even has ongoing constructions for additional stores.

The more popular palengke or talipapa is always full with visitors, until closing time, buying souvenirs and other items from Boracay. With the tourism department's "Wow Philippines" campaign, more tourists are expected to come to this island known for its pristine beaches and white, powdery sand.

FILIPINOS account for 70 percent of Boracay's visitors, the rest are foreigners, mostly Koreans.

Cash grows from her mango trees

By Tonette Orejas

PDI Central Luzon Desk

CANDELARIA, Zambales—Evelyn Grace uses her homegrown dinamulag or carabao mango variety to make dried mangoes, puree, wine and jelly. The seeds go into the Garce family's nursery here that churns out mango seedlings by the hundreds.

The peelings, she said, are dried, converted into organic fertilizers or feed for the chickens the Graces raise in their home-cum-work place in Barangay Luis here.

"Walang tapon (No wastage)," Grace, 45, says.

She says it is through that principle, matched by hard work, that she and her husband Rudel have been able to earn more than enough to meet the family's day-to-day needs and save for their future.

Their sons are 16 and eight years old and are enrolled in public schools.

Growing mangoes and making foodstuffs from these are Grace's way of showing that the mango can really uplift the lives of farming families.

That, Grace points out, is an advocacy she has taken to heart since she worked for the Farms Systems Development Corp. (FSDC) in the latter years of martial rule.

The late strongman Ferdinand Marcos formed the FSDC by virtue of Presidential Decree 381 to help develop the market for Philippine agriculture.

In Zambales, one of the provinces where the FSDC implemented the program, Grace learned the rudiments of farming by working with farmers, scientists and market specialists. The corporation was dissolved immediately after the People Power Revolution in 1986.

Firm believer

She, however, remained a firm believer in the potential of mangoes for economic development so Grace started her own mango orchard that same year.

For a start, she planted 20 trees in a 2,200 square-meter lot that Rudel's family owns in Candelaria. Grace, a native of San Antonio town, showcased the latest mango growing technology in their farms to her neighbors.

By 1991, Grace and some friends helped established the Kaisa Farmers Cooperative. Its aim was to help the mango industry in the province by helping the growers in obtaining loans and technology.

In 1995, she set up her own enterprise, the Green Thumb Agri Products, which became her corporate vehicle in mango processing.

"There were export rejects of good quality that ended up being rotten because the prices were so low," she says.

On the side, she took contracts for fruit bagging, believing that this method developed in the Visayan region was a way of improving the yield.

This laborious technique entailed covering every fruit with loose paper pack made out of efiting the SOS children.

IN a natural and neat process, Evelyn Grace prepares dried mangoes out of export rejects that are still of good quality.

The bank's commitment, however, goes beyond just providing material help to the SOS Villages.

Almost 60 percent of the bank's 600-strong officers and staff have done volunteer work at the SOS Village in Alabang. Many volunteered their weekends while others supported campaigns to solicit books for the learning centers or taught the children how to read.

"What is important is that many of our employees have developed personal relationships with the children and these children need many friends," Raman said.

Stanchart employees also spend time and effort to teach the children how to write, appreciate music, play sports and even do a bit of gardening.

A social responsibility committee under the chief executive officer oversees the bank's corporate responsibility program. The committee is composed of officers from the different departments, and it has since managed to put up charity-related events every month.

Happy villages

Stanchart chose to make the SOS Village the cornerstone of its corporate social responsibility program because of its unique program to help orphaned and neglected children become the best adults that they can be.

The SOS Children's Village concept was born in 1949 out of the vision of German doctor Hermann Gmeiner's conviction that help for orphaned and neglected children can only become better citizens if they grow up within a family and at home.

So instead of the typical orphanage or child care center where the children sleep in dormitories with a number of social development workers taking care of them, the SOS children are split into groups of eight to ten with each group forming their own family.

They are brothers and sisters and they live under the care of an SOS mother, just like a natural family. They have their own house and about 14 to 20 houses comprise a Children's Village.

The SOS Children's Village take special pride in their "mothers" because these are women who have dedicated their lives to children not their own. The children, on the other hand, live together as brothers and sisters. Related siblings are kept together.

Gmeiner's concept was met with scorn when he first presented it to the church and government in Germany but he persisted and there are now Children's Villages spread in 131 countries.

Gmeiner himself was present when the first SOS Village was set up in Batangas in 1964. He came in 1963 upon the invitation of the former Austrian consul Dr. George V. Winteritz and his wife Susie, who have been living in the Philippines for 30 years and sponsored a child to the SOS Children's Village in Austria since 1957.

From that first village, there are now close to 14 SOS Children's Villages in the Philippines that take care of 780 children and 96 "mothers".

Corporate values

It is through their close work with the SOS families that Stanchart employees live the virtues that define the bank, which are courage, responsive, international, creative and trustworthy.

Stanchart CEO Simon Morris says: "I am humbled by their passion and dedication to go beyond their professional work and offer their time to support the disadvantaged children of SOS."

"I hope that our engagement for SOS Children's Villages could encourage other sectors to extend more help," Morris adds.

used newspapers. She says this protected the fruits from harmful pests and the harsh winds.

She invested a portion of the income from these ventures into planting 20 more trees. Grace also went into contract growing, tapping her neighbors on a 40-60 (percent) sharing on gross sales.

Two years later, she started making dried mangoes.

"I prepared it as a snack for my children. I did not put preservatives into it because I wanted them to eat healthy food," Grace recalls.

Word of mouth

She gave out the excess as gifts and tokens to her balikbayan classmates at the Luzon Technical Institute.

Then word soon spread about the sweets that Grace made. The volume of the orders ranged from two to 10 kilograms then eventually increasing to several dozens. Just this April, she says the orders had grown to 350 kg.

From just her, Rudel and their children, the production unit has also expanded to include four relatives. But just the same, Grace handles the quality control and packaging. Rudel takes charge of the peeling, slicing, cooking and sun drying.

The couple maintains a very neat workplace because as Grace explains, "food must always be clean."

The windows and doors are enclosed by screens, pots, vats and other kitchen utensils are sanitized and the bamboo drying pads are enclosed in plastic sheets.

Although no preservatives are used for her foodstuff, Grace says her dried mangoes, for instance, lasts for eight months because of the natural and neat production process.

In the recently held Zambales mango festival, Grace sold 70 kg or 700 packs of dried mangoes. A 100-gram pack sells for P40.

The mango puree sells for P40 for every 1.5-liter container. Most of the buyers are mothers with school-aged children.

The mango jelly and wine, Grace's newest addition to the by-products of mangoes are not yet produced on a commercial scale. But their neighbors are constant buyers, she says.

Packaging is still Grace's concern nowadays and the Department of Science and Technology is helping her.

She still works as a micro-finance officer of the Sambali Area Development Bank. She has been on the job for five years but considers mango growing her main source of income.

Women over men"Many in the mango business are women because they are not pulitikeros like the men," she explains. By pulitikero, she means being easily swayed by requests of friends.

"When we women say this is the price, the delivery time and the quantity, we really mean it," she says.

Also, women have passion for details, a trait that Grace says is needed in the quality control of the fruits and the foodstuff.

Grace says that she has held on to the value of persistence through the years that she has constantly pushed for an improvement of the province's mango industry and in the short time that she has explored cash products out of it.

"Ako yung taong hindi sumusuko (I'm the type of person who does not give up easily)," she says.

She also prefers that her endeavor remains small and family-based in scale because it is the way to survive in an industry where traders and agricultural suppliers still maintain a monopoly.

She once lost P100,000 in a single harvest season and never wanted to lose that much money again.

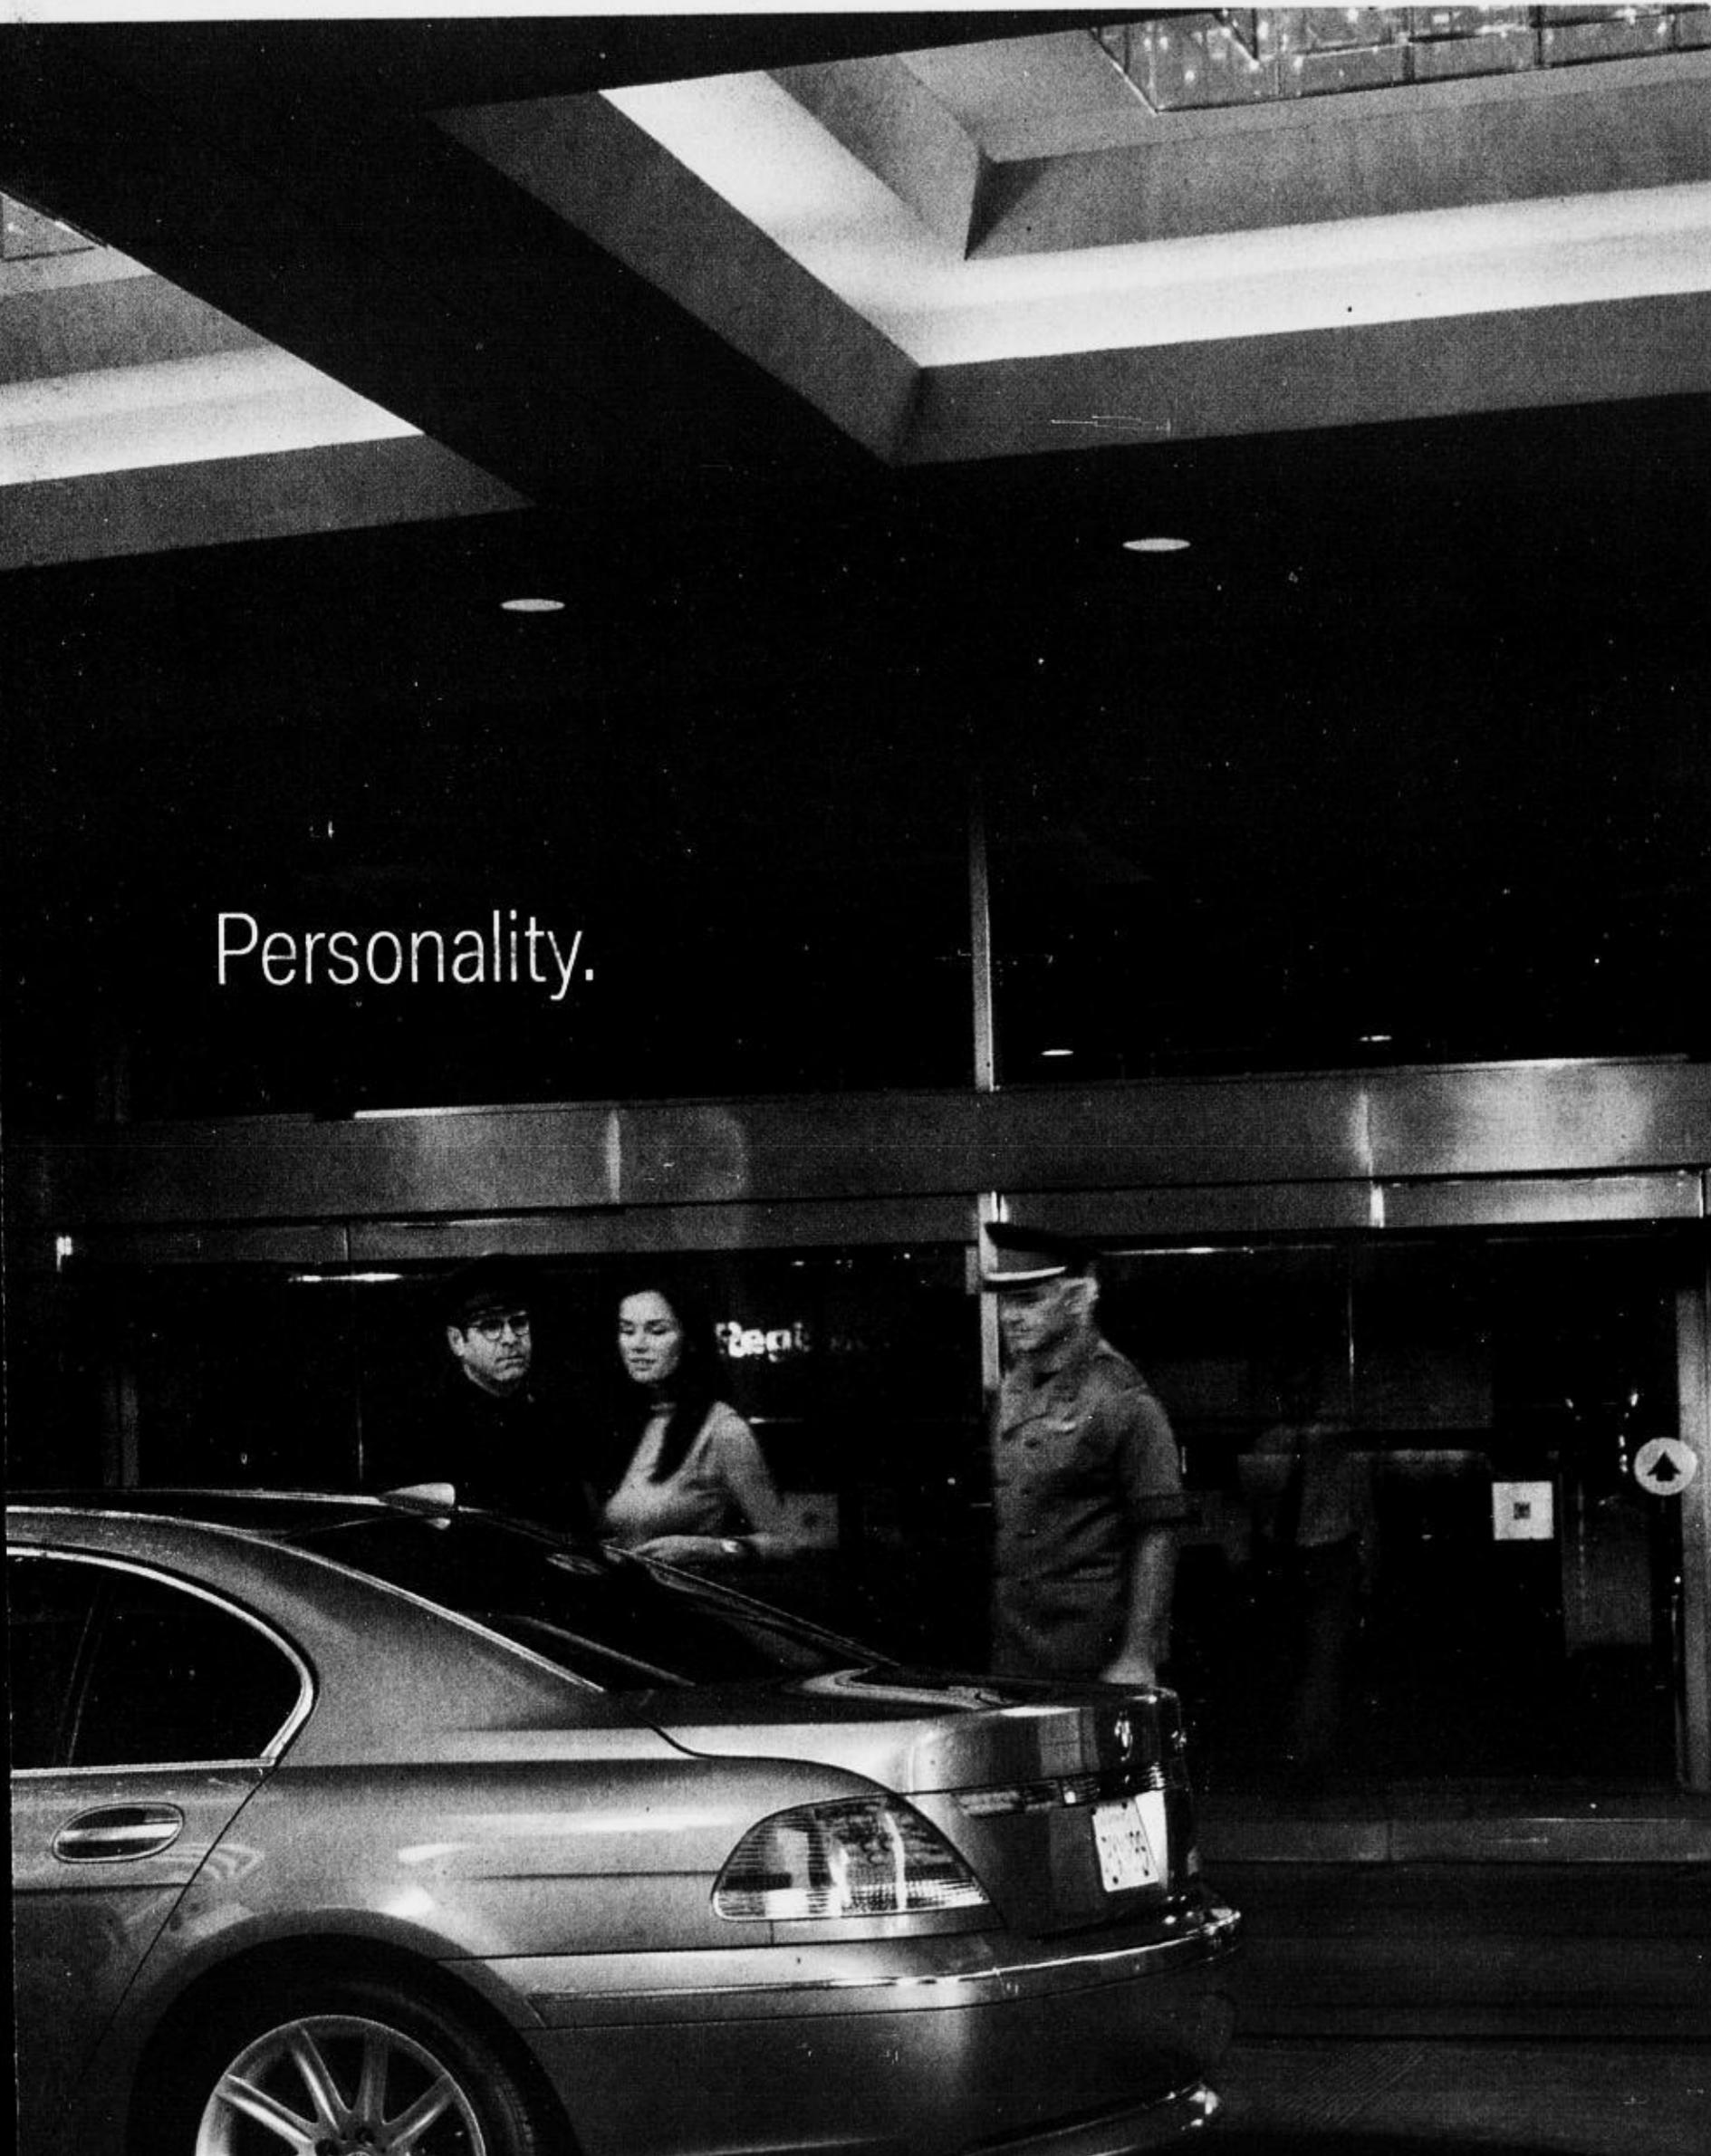

THE GRACE couple grows mangoes, makes foodstuff and plants rice and gabi during the off-harvest season.

Request for Quotations

Philippines
Early Childhood Development Project
Supply and Delivery of Various Drugs
RFQ No. ADB-ECD-03-DOH-001

1. The Government of the Philippines has received loans from the Asian Development Bank (ADB) toward the cost of the Early Childhood Development Project and it intends to apply part of the proceeds of these loans to payment under the contract for which this invitation for bids is issued.

2. The Department of Health now requests price quotations for the supply and delivery of the following drugs:

Item No.	Description	Quantity	Unit
1	Ferrous Sulfate Drops	850,000	Bottles
2	Ferrous Sulfate Syrup	569,010	Bottles
3	Albendazole	1,189,800	Tablets

3. International shipping procedures will be conducted in accordance with ADB's procurement guidelines.

4. Interested eligible bidders may obtain further information and inspect the bidding documents at the Procurement and Logistics Service (PLS), Building 26 Department of Health, San Lazaro Compound, Sta. Cruz, Manila from April 23 to May 20, 2003 between 8:00 AM to 5:00 PM.

5. A complete set of bidding documents may be purchased by any interested eligible bidder at the said address upon payment of a non-refundable fee of FIVE THOUSAND PESOS (P5,000.00) or ONE HUNDRED FIFTY US DOLLARS (US$150.00), including mail fee for foreign suppliers. The method of payment may be cash or bank draft. If payment is in form of bank draft, the check should be to the account of the Department of Health. Information including names of potential bidders and contact persons, telephone and facsimile numbers, cable, e-mail and mailing address should be provided in the application to facilitate communications during the bidding process.

6. Quotations must be delivered at COBAC Office, Department of Health, Building 3, San Lazaro Compound, Sta. Cruz, Manila on or before 9:00 a.m. on 21 May 2003.

7. Quotations must be accompanied by a Bid Security of not less than two (2%) percent of the total Bid Price in the currency of the quotation or another freely convertible currency. Late quotations shall be rejected. Quotations will be opened in the presence of the Bidders' representatives who choose to attend on 21 May 2003 at 9:00 a.m. at the COBAC Office, Department of Health, San Lazaro Compound, Sta. Cruz, Manila.

8. Prior to opening of quotations, a pre-bid conference will also be held at the COBAC Office at 9:00 a.m. on 7 May 2003.

9. The Department of Health will not be responsible for any cost or expenses incurred by Bidders in connection with the preparation or delivery of quotations.

10. In the comparison of quotations, ADB's Domestic Preference Scheme will be applied in accordance with the provisions stipulated in the instruction to Bidders.

11. The DOH reserves the right to accept or reject any quotation, and to annul the bidding process and reject all quotations at any time prior to Contract award, without thereby incurring any liability to the affected bidder or bidders and to waive any minor defects or infirmities therein and to accept such quotation as may be considered most advantageous to the government.

Touch Mobile heats up Baguio

Aga and Charlene with ASAP mainstays Sunshine Cruz and Piolo Pascual.

WHAT otherwise would have been a usually cool Sunday afternoon in the City of Pines had turned out to be a sizzling hot midday when an estimated crowd of 10,000 trooped to Burnham Park to watch the live telecast of ABS-CBN's variety show ASAP.

Featured in the three-hour show was a special program dubbed "Isang Milyong Pasasalamat ng Touch Mobile" topbilled by superstar couple-endorsers Aga Muhlach and Charlene Gonzales.

The audience, whom radio reports identified as residents not only of Baguio but also of its neighboring provinces like La Union and Pangasinan, were in a deliriously festive mood as they lapped up every entertainment number performed by ASAP hosts Vina Morales, Sunshine Cruz, Assunta de Rossi, Heart Evangelista, John Prats, Piolo Pascual, Carlos Agassi, Diether Ocampo, Carol Banawa, Bernard Palanca, and Rica Peralejo, and guests Judy Ann Santos, Bing Loyzaga, Bea Alonzo, Mylene Dizon, Aiza Marquez, Shaina Magdayao, Camille Prats, William Martinez, Yayo Aguilera, Nonoy Zufiaga, Hajji Alejandro, Marco Sison, Lotlot, Matet and Ian de Leon, Ayen Munji, and many more.

Aga and Charlene, fresh from their successful Touch Mobile road tours in Batangas and Cavite, were in their best elements as they joined other stars in a well-applauded song-and-dance medley. The couple then thanked the crowd who, by then, were almost feverish with excitement, for taking part in Touch Mobile's celebration of coming close to hitting the millionth mark in subscriber base barely 18 months since its launch.

As a way of paying tribute to Touch Mobile's loyal subscribers, Aga and Charlene awarded Ma. Teresa G. Lawagan, a 21-year-old nursing student of St. Louis University, with a ten-year free supply of Touch Mobile cards.

Lawagan was just one among the ten-thousand-or-so people who braved the Touch Mobile-powered heat that tempered the cool mountain air of Baguio, to get a heavy dose of fun and live entertainment.

DMCI backs Firefly tour

THE FIREFLY Brigade, a citizen's volunteer action group whose advocacy is to work for clean air and a habitable, people-friendly environment in our cities, is all geared up for today's Tour of the Fireflies. Including rest stops, the event that normally takes about 3 to 4 hours will start off at the Marikina Riverbanks. The tour, so called after the glowing insects now rarely sighted in the metropolis due to poor air quality threatening their survival, is a 50-km bicycle ride around 7 cities to promote cycling as an alternative means of transportation that is environmentally friendly and healthy. DMCI Homes, regarded as the country's premiere urban residential developer, rallies and supports this noble cause. In a recent meeting at Pier One, DMCI Homes was represented by marketing support head Loonor Gopuoc, Katti Santa Ana, convenor of the Firefly Brigade, and Edgar Jooson, DMCI project manager and Firefly Brigade member.

Bankers learn more by giving a helping hand

By Tina Arceo-Dumla

STANDARD Chartered Bank country financial officer Sridhar Raman was barely one month in the Philippines when he decided to go with other bank employees and visit the SOS Children's Village in Alabang, a haven for orphaned, abandoned, neglected and impoverished children.

Raman heard stories of how some of these children were forced to seek shelter because their parents were drunkards or drug addicts, or how parents left their children behind because they simply could not afford to take care of them.

But because of the work done by the Save Our Souls Children's Villages Philippines, a private, non-political welfare organization that provides long-term care and education to children in need, many of these children have gone on to build better lives for themselves and their families despite their extremely difficult circumstances.

SOS helped these children realize their dreams and Stan-chart has committed itself since three years ago to be a partner in its efforts.

"It dawned on me that there are many things that we take for granted. But by helping these children we realize just how lucky we really are so we have committed to community service and be a part of its program for these children," Raman said in a briefing.

"We realize that for us to be part of providing a better future for the Philippines, we should help these children realize their dreams," Raman added.

Stanchart, thus, set up learning centers in all SOS Villages nationwide, which are located in Manila, Lipa, Iloilo, Cebu, Tacloban, Calbayog and Davao.

The SOS Village in Alabang also became the first beneficiary of Stanchart's "Books Around the World" campaign.

Stanchart's branches in some 50 countries sent more than 5,000 titles to the Philippines and these are now at the blue and green Learning Center ben-

Imee Marcos takes over Joyce's role

By Marvi Ablaza Gil
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—Organizers of this year's re-enactment of the Battle of Mactan wanted sexy star Joyce Jimenez to play the role of Bulakna, wife of Lapu-lapu. But her talent fee was too steep for their meager budget.

Ilocos Rep. Imee Marcos agreed to take on the part—for free.

Lapu-lapu City Councilor Damian Gomez, chair of the Lapu-lapu City Council's tourism, cultural and historical affairs, told the INQUIRER that they had an initial list of actors for today's re-enactment of the historic battle. He said they wanted Jimenez and Pampanga Gov. Lito Lapid to reprise their roles in the 2002 movie "Lapu-lapu," which won best picture in the latest Film Academy of the Philippines Awards.

Lapu-Lapu

Lapid had initially agreed to play the role of Lapu-lapu in the re-enactment, but he later backed out, citing other commitments. Fellow actor Roi Vinzon took over the role.

The organizers made initial inquiries about Jimenez but decided they could not afford to hire the actress. This year's re-enactment budget is only P1.75 million, a lot lower than last year's P3.5 million.

Although the event is a project of the Lapu-lapu City government, it is highly dependent on contributions from the private sector. For this year, the organizers were not able to get many sponsors as the economic crisis has prompted a number of business firms to cut back on expenses.

Last November, Marcos was the guest of honor during the feast day of Lapu-lapu City's patroness Birhen sa Regla (Virgin of the Rule). It was then that the re-enactment of the Battle of Mactan was discussed, as well as which actress would play Bulakna.

NO NEOPHYTE when it comes to acting, Rep. Marcos (above) plays a lawyer in the GMA 7 telenovela "Ang libigin ay ikaw Pa Rin." She's doing the one-day role today, for free, after organizers found they couldn't afford Joyce Jimenez.

To the delight of the members of the city council, Marcos volunteered to be Lapu-lapu's wife in the re-enactment, according to Gomez.

Mactan Island

Marcos, a frequent visitor of the resorts on Cebu's Mactan Island, is not exactly an acting neophyte. In her younger days, the eldest child of the late strongman Ferdinand Marcos used to act on stage as member of the Philippine Educational Theater Association (Peta). She was also behind the Experimental Cinema of the Philippines (ECP) during the Marcos years.

Another actor, Dante Rivero, will portray the role of the Portuguese explorer Ferdinand Magellan. The rest of the cast is composed of more than 400 actors from different Mactan barangays and the stick fighters of the Mactan Island Eskrima Alliance.

Vinzon, Rivero and Marcos were to rehearse only yesterday, just a day before the play date. Director Daisy Baad would brief them on their blockings.

The actors will be performing on ground covered with slippery mud and mossy rocks.

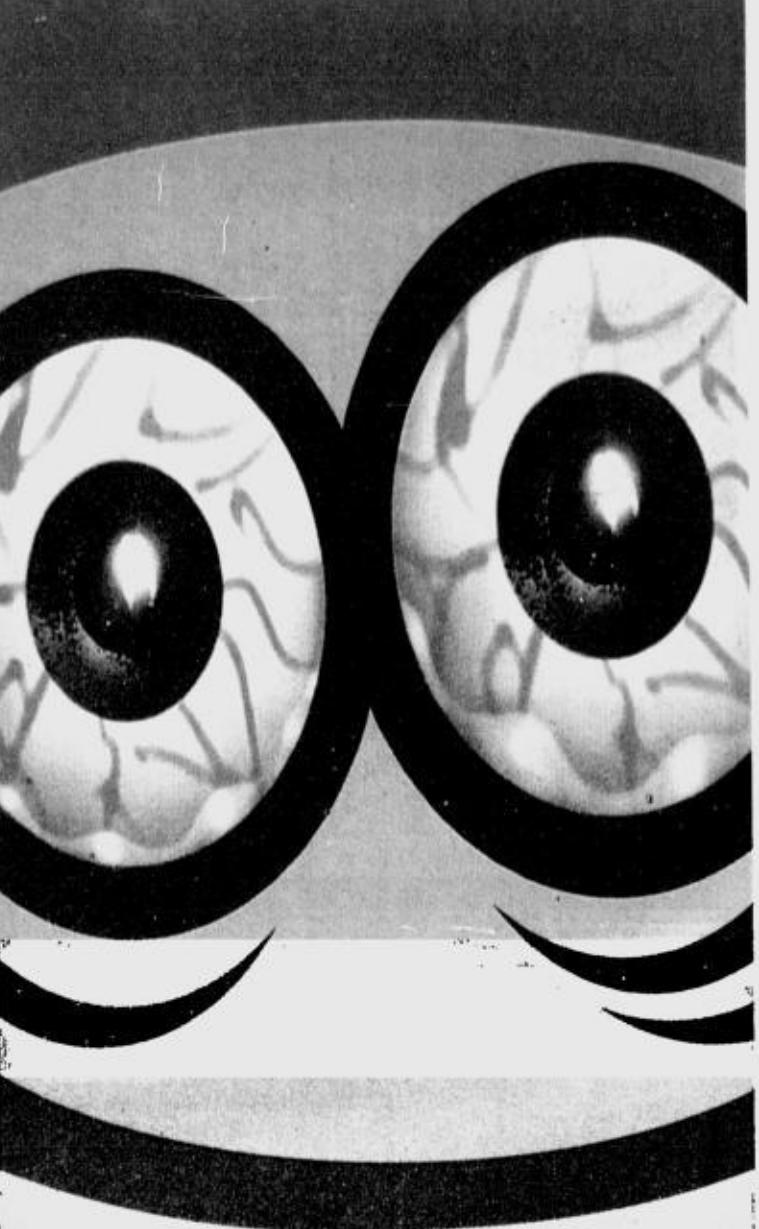

Magellan

Only on its second year, the re-enactment has become a major tourist draw. The Battle of Mactan commemorates the first uprising against Western aggression.

On March 17, 1521, Magellan reached the island of Cebu. He befriended the Sultan of Cebu and successfully introduced Christianity. Lapu-lapu, however, refused to bow to Magellan. To teach him a lesson, Magellan decided to attack Lapu-lapu on Mactan Island.

The Battle of Mactan was fought on the shore at low tide. The Spaniards, it turned out, were no match for Lapu-lapu and his men who fought using machetes, bamboo sticks, bows and arrows, and spears. Lapu-lapu succeeded in killing the explorer from Portugal.

For the first time, the re-enactment will feature arnis, the art of stick fighting as seen and recorded by European historian Antonio Pigafetta. Also known as pangamut (use of hands) or eskrima, arnis uses bamboo sticks as weapons.

According to a book written by Baltazar Gonzales in the 1800s, pangamut was brought to Mactan by Datu Mangal, father of Lapu-lapu and direct descendant of the Bornean datus who migrated to the Philippines to escape a repressive ruler.

Arnис is acknowledged as the only indigenous Philippine martial art.

Do we really want to relive our youth?

By Jose Javier Reyes
Contributor

SO there we were in some scenic enclave in the City of Pines taping an episode of a drama anthology with the very beautiful Kristine Hermosa and the man every woman wants to be the father of her children, Piolo Pascual.

Amid the foliage and the sinful outburst of blossoms, a good friend of so many years shared a few moments with me as the set-up was being completed. She was an actress, and she was with me to enjoy a few days of respite.

As I gasped for breath while climbing to the top of the slope where we were shooting, she started a conversation that completely demolished any illusions of romance about the uniqueness of moment and locale.

My friend talked about the travails of perimenopause.

Of course, we were of the same age. We had known each other, since, uh, high school, and although we trod different paths, the necessity of work brought us together again. People our age went through the entire Gail Sheehy route: we saw each other during our turbulent teens, endured each other during the terrible 20s and wrestled with our demons as we lived through the terrific 30s.

We read enough self-analysis books to anticipate the crises that go with the sagging of the flesh, the bloating of the middle, the loosening of facial muscles, all resulting in diminishing returns when it comes to the search for a lifetime partner. In other words, both single and about to join Bea Arthur's legendary gang of Golden Girls, we have come to consider ourselves survivors.

Emotional setbacks

But then a question came to mind. Was surviving enough? Yes, there were emotional setbacks—even unpleasant epiphanies when we met college-age kids of our contemporaries. Worse, we started to get invited to the weddings of our friends' children—no longer as secondary sponsors but as godparents. Oh, God!

Conversations during "happy" get-togethers involved the itemization of ailments like factory defects, ranging from perennial constipation to uncontrolled blood pressure, from cardiovascular problems to gastrointestinal difficulties. We heard of contemporaries leaving this earthly existence... and we suddenly developed a profound interest in the obituaries.

It was as if one morning you woke up to find you turned into exactly the sort of bloke you once laughed at when you could boogie all night and still make a lot of sense at the 9 a.m. meeting the following day.

It was not as if this was all unexpected. The consciousness of mortality had emerged when the body started manifesting physical signs that showed every day of the so many decades of your life.

Why was it that a week-long crash diet did not yield the same amount of weight loss it did in your 20s or 30s? Why did many hours of sweating like a harassed racehorse on the treadmill fail to get rid of those bulging inches around your middle? Why did you suddenly look unforgivably ridiculous, even sacrilegious, when you sported hipsters?

Ravaged by time

My friend started enumerating all the anguish she felt because her body was beginning to feel the ravages of time. She talked about hot flushes, mood swings and the fear that after her fertility ceased, she would no longer be the same person.

I tried to console her by saying she could finally say goodbye to menstrual cramps and the risk of bearing a love child if she should be reckless, careless or downright desperate. But that did not help. We spent the rest of the time talking about something that nobody talked about but everybody had to go through. And the mood was dispiriting.

Well, yes. People exert Herculean efforts to try to push back Father Time. We come up with all sorts of theories and practices to preserve the vibrancy of youth. We go through periodic facials (complete with laser toning, mud pack, pure oxygen therapy), pamper various parts of our anatomy including our feet (foot scrub, paraffin dipping, foot sanding). If

Despite the sagging skin, receding hairline and bloated tummy, we would never go back to those years of major errors and unfruitful emotional investments these were not enough, hand me the syringe with 50 units of Botox, my dear.

Cosmetic surgeons make millions and have houses built in the most stylish corners of the suburbs because there are those with money and of age who will go under the knife to have their fats pumped out, facial skin stretched like alligator leather, not to mention the correct size and shape of proboscis installed on a face where eye bags and wrinkles have been erased.

We rush to the gym. We lock ourselves inside sauna cubicles until we look like overcooked dimsum; we have our flesh massaged, oiled, scraped and peeled, hoping that after spending a few thousand pesos, we will emerge from a salon, clinic, spa or loony bin looking like Kristine or Piolo, who are young enough to be our children.

Mental fitness

We can always claim all this is for our health—mainly, our mental health—or that we work too hard and deserve the egotistical indulgence as we try to have the derriere of Jennifer Lopez.

There is nothing wrong with looking good—as long as we feel good, too. If we feel good about ourselves despite and because of our age, then fine. There is no law against dyeing your hair in a strange shade of red closely resembling the color of rambutan to hide the whites and grays. Besides, half the joy of primping is not in the effect it has on people—but in boosting our courage to look at the mirror right after we get out of bed.

As we drove back to Manila, my friend and I talked about what our lives—how, by circumstance and maybe by choice, we were both still alone. We went through the roster of the loves of our lives, ended up laughing really hard, enjoying the wisdom and comfort that years provide, assessing moments that constituted our lifelines.

We came up with one conclusion: we were not growing old, we were merely gaining vintage. Menopause, much like puberty only coming from the opposite direction, was a necessary phase. Unlike hair dyeing or Botox injections, it was a natural process a homo sapien went through to get to a next level of life. So how could it be so bad?

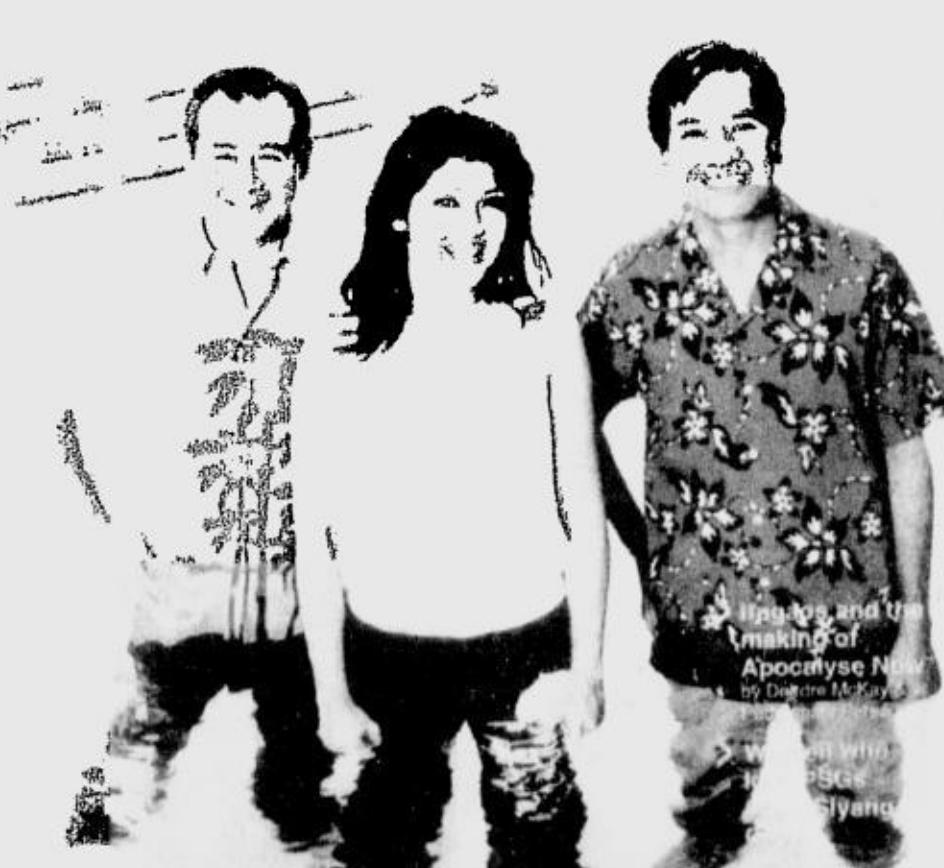

Then we asked ourselves: If we had the power to pull back time, would we go back to when we were 16 years old? We looked at each other and laughed again. Oh, no, no, no! Never! Despite the sagging skin, the receding hairline and the bloated tummy, we would never go back to those years when seeking for—and defining—one's self meant drowning in major errors and unfruitful emotional investments.

Here we were nearing the half-century mark. We should be happy. We've been there... done that... and, yes, there's still a helluva lot more to do... even if it means rubbing peppermint foot lotion on our feet each night before we go to sleep alone in our beds.

Unlikely troika on mag's cover

APART from being members of the House of Representatives and having lives shaped by martial law, what do Imee Marcos, Satur Ocampo and Teddy Boy Locsin have in common?

The three share the cover of Jessica Zafra's Flip magazine. A profile of Ocampo, a former rebel leader jailed by Ferdinand Marcos, appears back-to-back with a no-holds-barred feature on Imee, Marcos' eldest daughter.

Locsin having fun at The Peninsula Manila joins the other two in the magazine.

Flip is published and edited by columnist, author and television host Zafra. Call 750-3755 or e-mail flap@flip.com.ph.

Snoring, Defined and What it Can Lead To.

Your basic information on snoring problems

A man can do only what he can do. But if he does that each day he can sleep at night and do it again the next day.

—Albert Schweitzer

Find it hard to get your eight hours' worth of sleep because of your loved one's loud, irritating snore? Most of us inevitably do so during our restful slumber. However, more than causing domestic disputes, snoring may actually indicate a serious health condition that requires medical attention.

What causes snoring?

Snoring is the noisy breathing through the nose and mouth during sleep. It affects about half of men and a quarter of women from 40 years old onwards. When you sleep, the muscles in your tongue, throat, and palate relax, and as you breathe, air passes through these relaxed muscles, causing them to vibrate. These vibrations create those all-too-familiar sharp, hoarse sounds. The narrower the airway becomes, the more intense the vibration, thus the louder the snore.

Why do we snore?

Overweight people are predisposed to snoring because they have narrower and less firm throat tissues. Enlarged/swollen tonsils or adenoids, a low, thick palate, or an elongated uvula (the triangular piece of tissue hanging from the soft palate) can also cause the airway to be narrow and obstructed, thus increasing the vibrations.

Nasal congestion and blockages due to allergies can also cause snoring by limiting the amount of air that flows through the nose, forcing you to breathe through the mouth.

Snoring can also be attributed to taking alcohol and certain drugs, such as tranquilizers, as these can cause relaxation of throat muscles.

Consulting your ENT doctor

Snoring loudly with occasional pauses in breathing can signify sleep apnea, a serious disorder where the throat tissues cause the airway to close. When this happens, breathing stops and oxygen is cut off from the body. The brain detects the significant loss of oxygen, and it signals the person to wake up and and re-open the airways. The interruptions in one's sleep can last for 10 to 30 seconds, and can be repeated several times during the night. Because of this, sleep apnea in adults increases the risk of health problems, like heart failure, high blood pressure, and stroke.

It is of utmost importance to seek your ENT doctor for medical advice on loud and frequent snoring, so he or she may evaluate and recommend possible treatments.

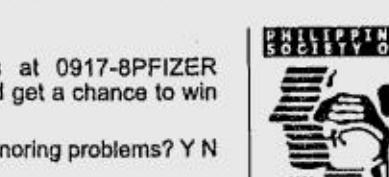

Snoring... Snoring... Gone!

Changing your lifestyle can greatly reduce snoring. Try the following measures to quiet down at night:

- Maintain a healthy diet and weight, as being overweight is a common cause of snoring. Don't forget to exercise regularly.
- Treat nasal congestion by using decongestants for no more than 3 consecutive days.
- Regularly gargle with an antiseptic mouthwash. This helps prevent enlarged or inflamed tonsils and adenoids that may cause increased tissue vibrations.
- Limit alcohol and sedative intake.
- Sleep on your side, instead of your back.

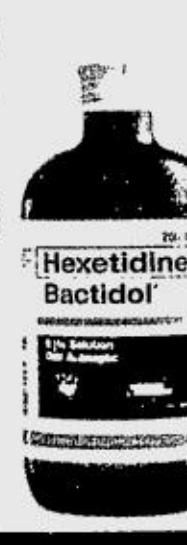

When loud snoring continues and worsens, your ENT doctor might suggest performing surgical procedures such as laser surgery and somnoplasty or using dental devices, nasal strips, or pressurized masks.

A good night's sleep is not a luxury. Rather, it is a necessity. Daily productivity depends highly on rest and sleep. Get the sleep you deserve. See your ENT doctor now and rid yourself of that bad nocturnal habit.

Young devotees visit Our Mother of Sorrows chapel in Batong Paluay

BATONG Paluay was once a sleepy barrio one and half kilometers away from San Andres town in Catanduanes.

Three years ago, hundreds of youths from Virac walked 21½ kilometers to reach the chapel of Our Mother of Sorrows or "Dolorosa" in Batong Paluay.

Sheer energy and a burning love for the Virgin Mother are what drove these young people to walk all the way to the chapel. They came to ask for help in their studies, say thank you for passing their exams, and pray for their loved ones.

But it is not only the youth who come but people from all walks of life: mothers carrying their babies, fathers holding their children, single men and women, and old people. They all have something to tell the Virgin whose icon dominates the main altar of the chapel.

Nicanor Solmerano, the caretaker, says that people specially come on Good Friday. Barangay chair Juan Manlangit told us that there were plenty of people by 10 p.m. of Holy Thursday and the youth still had to arrive. By 12 midnight, they came joining throngs of people praying to the Virgin.

I arrived in Virac the day before via Asian Spirit and was able to go to Batong Paluay with my friends Ted Arcilla and Myshelle Tan through the kindness of Mayor Joseph Cua, who lent us his car.

People were lighting candles at the left entrance of the chapel, while others stayed at the pews to pray. We prayed for those who asked us to pray for them. We lined up to pray to the "Dolorosa" and touch her face.

Reaching Batong Paluay

The miracle of the icon of the "Dolorosa" was believed to have begun during Spanish times. Imprinted on stone, the icon was found on a kamias tree. It was only the size of a thumb. Rosita Santalices Pascual, 85, with whom I stayed, told me that the icon started to grow until the whole face appeared.

Tita Rosina also told me the story of a woman who walked around the barrio begging for materials to build her nipa hut. When the people brought them to the place she mentioned, they found the icon at the altar looked just like her.

Through the donations of barrio folk, devotees who come and the Association of Batong Paluay based in Metro Manila, the nipa hut was eventually transformed into a cement chapel. Masses are held at 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. on the First Friday of the month, while a 5 p.m. Mass is celebrated on other Fridays. Juan Manlangit told me that the land where the chapel stood was donated by the Nicolas Vargas family.

How to reach Virac

Take Asian Spirit's direct flight from Manila that leaves at 6:15 a.m. Or take a bus to Tobacco Port in Cubao or Pasay. Ride either the M/V Eugenia or Star Ferry. Travel time to San Andres Port is 3½ hours. Motored tricycles can bring you to Batong Paluay from San Andres.

While in San Andres, where there is a Paradise Hotel, explore the 403-year-old Church of San Andres, the town's patron. Parish priest is Fr. Edison Bernardo.

I was blessed to have been able to attend the Holy Thursday rituals with the choir, led by Boy Collantes, singing beautifully during the Half-Mass. Noli Rodriguez did the altar of repose (a promise that he fulfills every year after he got well from a stroke 10 years ago). I walked in front of the carroza of Sta. Cleofe with Dr. Luz Arcilla Bancosta who created the saint's dress.

Live 'kalbaryo'

The town of San Andres takes its Good Friday observance seriously. The people built scenes from the Passion and Death of Jesus Christ in some corners of the town. When the procession passed by, it felt good to be part of this reenactment. We met Ramon Sanchez, who used to play Christ. His son portrays the role now. We also met Yoly Santalices Monjard, whose family brought out the "Santo Entierro."

Family tradition

Ascension falls on June 1. It has been the tradition of the Santelices family to bring out their image of the Lord of the Ascension. The tradition began with Pelagio and Fortunata Santelices, parents of Rosita Santalices Pascual. They had 14 children: 10 girls and 4 boys.

Tita Rosina said the family and their relatives take turns in bringing out the image every Ascension Day for Holy Mass and procession. This year, Felicitas Aldave Galian is the hermana. Rosemarie Lorica, a grand niece of Tita Rosina, always goes home on Ascension Day.

To make it faster for people to reach San Andres, Mayor Cua will launch the bus line of the route Manila-San Andres-Manila at the end of the month through Regina Shipping Lines.

Miracles of Bambino

Devotees who go to Naic on the first of May have different reasons in visiting the place. Some go to pray for favors; while others say thank you. Miracles have been done by the Bambino de Araceli, according to Tess Jasmin, who works for Filipino Paradise Complex, where the chapel of the Bambino is located.

A woman from Quezon City was able to conceive a child after many years.

An amateur golfer stayed at the chapel for one night and prayed. He was able to win in the "hole in one" competition and bagged a Spacewagon.

A niece of Enrique Echauz, son of Dr. Romeo Echauz, was suspected of having cancer from a birthmark behind her ear. She was scheduled for surgery, but after praying to the Bambino, she was cured of cancer.

A Mass and karakol will take place at 2 p.m. on May 1 at Filipino Paradise Complex, Barrio Sabang, Naic, Cavite.

Divine Mercy feast

Today is the feast of the Divine Mercy. The national shrine in Sta. Rosa, Marilao, Bulacan, will be full of people by 5 a.m. An altar has been built in the middle of a wide open area that can fill thousands of people. Fr. Vic Robles, the charismatic rector of the shrine, was able to build a church, a rectory, the 15 mysteries of the Rosary, a religious store and chapels in a place where there was nothing. He was able to do this through the help of many people who believe in the power of Jesus, the Divine Mercy.

The last time I saw Father Vic, he told me about a boy who was knocked down by a car. The distraught mother called Father Vic who came with an icon of the Divine Mercy. He held the icon high on the boy who was in a coma. Miracle of miracles, the boy lived and is well to this day.

The Archdiocesan Shrine of the Divine Mercy in Mandaluyong plans to put up a billboard of the Divine Mercy along Edsa in the Guadalupe area.

Masses on April 27 are as follows: 7 a.m., 9 a.m., 12 nn, 3 p.m., 4:30 p.m., 6 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Bishop Gabriel Reyes will say Mass at 7 a.m. and will be telecast live on NBN 4.

Divine Mercy's promise

The Lord Jesus of the Divine Mercy appeared to Sister Faustina and told her to paint an image of Himself with the signature: Jesus, I trust in You."

And then he said: "I promise that the soul who will venerate this image will not perish. I also promise victory over enemies already here on earth, especially at the hour of death. I myself will defend it as my own glory."

My friend Eddie Marfori reminded me that on the feast of the Divine Mercy, one should go to Confession and Holy Communion. It is part of a promise that those who do so will not perish without receiving the Last Sacraments.

Beguiling

I also had a little tête-à-tête with the beguiling Mariko Jacinto and New York-based lawyer Tunting Cruz. Oh, and Max Chua—how can she stay so slim!—and I talked about the jewelry pieces she has been designing. I also chatted up a storm with several restaurateurs: the great Louie Y and wife Cecille; EJ and Tess Litton; Manolet Dario; Marcel Crespo of Wherelse; Rock Star's Mikko Palanca and Jojo Manlongat. Then there were my fave shutterbug-slash-party-person Pepper Teehankee and EMI exec Twinkle Jagdameo; Victor Consunji, Jackie Yllana, Andrea Mercado and Tina Tinio.

Of course, liebchen, the fashion world could never go unrepresented. So from the designers to the ramp walkers, the fashionable movers and shakers shook their groove thong! Having the second Super Club officially opening summer was a brilliant idea. The summer place was packed and my absolute fave DJ Johnny Verse spun out all night, together with cohorts Robbie Sanchez and Allan Reyes.

Natch, man does not party alone. We all had this euphoric spirit, what with the waves lapping on the powdered shore, and Super Club's music bringing us to a higher groove. Pardon my poetic cheesiness, dearies, but Boracay does that to me.

HEY, moms, how would you like to bond with your daughters with this easy-to-do craft that makes use of beads and glitters in different eye-catching colors? Embellish your personal accessories like headbands and bangles with microfine beads and glitters and get noticed for your creativity!

"The great thing about this craft is there's no fuss, no mess, no splatter to worry about and deal with because the materials can be put in just one container," CRAFTS says Zeny Perez of Craft World in Robinsons Galleria (tel. 634-5882).

This craft is easy to make and can be done in a jiff. Making an attractive bangle, for instance, is as easy as one-two-three: Place adhesive tapes on the bangle, roll bangle over glitters and wear whenever you desire!

You can make unlimited designs, colors and shapes, which can be then turned into a multitude of useful items such as jewelry, pens, earrings, hanging décor or picture frames. This is fun for one child or a group of kids.

"This activity can be done by a child with the parents. This helps kids focus their attention and provide creative outlets."

Materials for this project include double adhesive tapes in different sizes, microfine

Earn from your sewing hobby

HOMEMAKERS and stay-home mommies can earn extra money this summer by turning your sewing hobby into a small business. You can use the money for your child's tuition in June or out-of-town summer trips to strengthen family ties. Below are practical projects that you can try at home. With determination, creativity and a Singer sewing machine, nothing is impossible!

Repair. If you are confident of your sewing skills, you can offer mending services in your neighborhood. Put up a sign at your gate or distribute flyers in your community to advertise your service. You can go beyond repairing and patching clothes and start making simple blouses and skirts that you can sell.

Personalize. Go beyond emblazoned nicknames. Ask your client to draw up a list of her favorite things, then incorporate these in the design. There are many items that can be personalized: pillowcases, towels, cellular cases, bags, scarves, aprons, T-shirts.

Make bags. Flea markets are a good place to sell affordable bags. Recycle old garments by sewing together patches with interesting patterns, and add details like buttons, beads and fringes.

Sell stuffed items. Create alphabet pillows and little stuffed dolls or animals. The stuffed items will make cute bed and desk accents or educational toys. You can test the marketability of your product by observing and asking your own kids what item appeals to them most.

Visit the Singer showroom nearest you or call the hotline at 1-800-100-SINGER (746437) if you're calling outside Manila, and 527-9958 within Manila. Singer gives free sewing lessons for every purchase of a sewing machine.

Kids' kitchen camp

LOOKING for a fun yet productive way for your kids to spend the summer? Enroll them in this year's Kids' Kitchen Camp organized by the San Miguel Purefoods Culinary Center.

The camp is open to kids 8-13 years old who are interested in learning cooking and baking. Sessions for the second group will be held April 29-30 and May 2; and for the third group, May 6-8, 1-4 p.m. at San Miguel Purefoods Culinary Center in Legazpi corner Eagle Streets, Barrio Ugong, Pasig City. Fee is P1,300 for the entire course. Call 671-9876 local 402, 405 or 259.

Craft workshops for kids

NATIONAL Book Store in Alabang held recently an art demonstration on how to turn simple cards, photo albums and other craft projects into captivating works of art.

The event introduced new and versatile products from CarlaCraft, creator of Carl Craft Punch. The products included craft punches, embossers, scissors and others.

Kimiko Kozutsumi of Carl Manufacturing Corp., the makers of CarlaCraft products, conducted the demonstrations.

NBS and Carl Manufacturing will hold more craft demos/workshops: today at NBS Shangri-La; April 27 at NBS Alabang; May 3 at NBS Glorietta; and May 10 at NBS Quezon Avenue.

Registration is until May 10, 2-4 p.m. Participants should be 13 years old and above, and must have purchased at least one CarlCraft or CarlaCraft item.

Orphans get an afternoon of fun

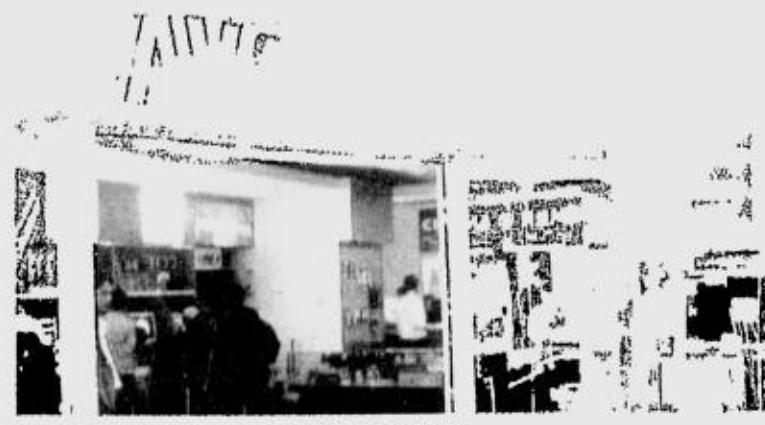

TWO big names in entertainment, Timezone Family Entertainment Center and Joey Rhythms 92.3 FM, organized recently fun activities for about 60 kids from the Angel's Home and Alay Pag-asa foster homes.

The Joey Cares Handog sa Batang Pilipino brought the kids—orphans and physically and emotionally abused—to Timezone in Glorietta 4 for an afternoon of free games.

Some of the kids danced at the Dance Revo machine, while others played the Funny Fish, winning tickets they could trade for pencils or pool sets.

The F355 Challenge, on the other hand, provided infinite fun for four kids at a time, who sped together to the finish line. The Rapid River, however, was the crowd favorite.

Timezone branches are at Glorietta 4, Glorietta 2, Alabang Town Center, Greenbelt 1 and 3, Starmall, Metropoint, Greenhills and now on the LG/FSM Megamall.

HOME THEATER SYSTEMS SALE

Take advantage of the special home theater systems sale at all AVSurfer branches until April 30. This means price cuts on all home theater systems including award-winning brands like Definitive Technology, Klipsch, NAD and Sherwood. AVSurfer has also prepared two special packages on exciting home theater systems with substantial discounts and 0-percent rates on 12-month payment terms. AVSurfer branches are located at Alabang Town Center, Rockwell Power Plant, Ayala Cebu, Ali Mall, Robinsons Galleria, Robinsons Imus, Robinsons Metro East, Robinsons San Fernando and Abanao Square-Baguio. Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome has hogged the headlines for weeks, raising questions as to what we can actually do to fight it.

The answer was remarkably simple. Keep yourself healthy.

Now, more than ever, vitamins have never been so important.

BENEFITS OF VITAMIN C

Vitamin C plays an important role in building our bodies' immunity.

- It inhibits the growth of viruses and is therefore crucial in the treatment of viral diseases.
- It stimulates macrophage functions.
- It increases the activity of natural killer (NK) cells.
- It enhances a host of bodily functions which enable our bodies to fight viral diseases and infections.*

CREATIVE EXPLOSION IN MALATE

METRO MANILA'S CREATIVE QUARTER

The Orosa-Nakpil collective, a thriving commune of nightlife establishments, proves once more that it can offer something other than the newest 'mallified' shopping center experience, Markus Schmidt exclaims!

Kenkoy, named after the laid-back, mischievous mascot of Filipino Komiks fame and one of the newest additions to the Malate night scene, is perhaps a fitting tribute to the quarter's legendary irreverence.

In the late '70s, when the disco fever was only a faint echo of Studio 54, Coco Banana was already making waves in the high society scene as the place to be seen in. When everybody was still into disco nights in the early '80s, Penguin Café near the Remedios Circle was already playing New Wave music, then alien to all but the hippest Euro-music trend watchers.

Now Malate has again come full circle, offering an eclectic mix of bars, cafés, lounges and restaurants that defy the rules of a metropolis accustomed to hanging out in rigidly planned, intensively market-researched malls.

Go to the corner of Orosa and Nakpil streets and you will find the likes of Fidel, a Moroccan-inspired café-restaurant that is setting the pace in design and style in the area. As you turn another corner beyond Fidel, you are greeted by the Pinoy Pop-Lichtenstein amalgam-inspired bar that is Komiks. Let your eye rove and you spot Bargo, a decidedly de-styled, not-so-fancy addition to the Malate mélange.

All this is, again, part of an unplanned brew of establishments that have found their own place in the neighborhood.

This organic brew is part of Malate's charm. The quarter's key citizens, establishment proprietors such as DJ Montano, owner of the Indian restaurant Raj, liquid lounge Acuario and the just-opened Courtyard Cuisine Chinoise, swear to the depth of Malate's persona.

"The key to Malate's charm is the amount of freedom it gives to the establishments that have sprung up [in it]," says Montano between sips of coffee.

Paradoxically, many say that the real secret behind the stylishness of Malate is that it does not follow any particular style, or trend for that matter. Rather, it sets trends by borrowing from, and improvising on, the experiences of its globe-trotting shop proprietors. Colin Mackay's strongly themed restaurants such as Sala, People's Palace, and the newly opened Mamma, are all inspired by intuitive notions of what the neighborhood needs in terms of dining and entertainment. They took off because they did not follow any trend or fad.

The ever-present ingredients, it seems, behind Malate's resilience, are the artists and bohemians who have given the district's nightlife its quaint character. Indeed, Malate can outscore every other destination in Metro Manila in terms of capacity to draw arty types—advertising's creative minds, interior designers, fashion designers, architects, painters, actors—you name them, they're in Malate.

One asks why this is, and the answer is almost unanimous: Because in Malate, you can be yourself. Whether you are part of the chi-chi or the hoi polloi, Malate has, it seems by decree, always something to offer.

And the depth of its character goes beyond the nightlife. It is something you see in the architecture, hear on the streets, and even smell in the cuisine.

Longtime residents often beam with wonder at the architecture, which is reminiscent of the Miami art deco. Old, American era buildings, such as the Michelle and Angela apartments fronting Roxas Boulevard, are the favored residences of designers, actors, painters, politicians and, of course, Malate's establishment owners.

With the richness and easy accessibility of different destinations, it is not surprising that a micro-community of highly productive people has formed in Malate. When one gets tired of the night life, there is Manila's famous sunset to enjoy at the bay.

Ultimately, Malate's fame has grown partly as a result of the continued stratification of the leisure and living destinations in the metro. The Malate of today is, in part, a collective reaction to the monolithic, increasingly corporate and contrived malls that have sprouted up in places like Makati and Ortigas. While beautiful, these places do not have the heritage and richness of character to become living, breathing communities that is at the cutting edge of creativity.

SALONMALATE

Sonny Zablan gathers four Malate diehards and moderates an informal roundtable

TWO decades ago, you could barely walk down the streets of Malate without being checked out by street walkers and the neighborhood toughie. Boarded-up storefronts and rundown apartments then characterized the seedy Malate neighborhood, despite its rich, historic past.

Today, thugs and hookers still walk those streets. But the Malate of today is far removed from what it was 20 years ago. Walk its streets and you are greeted by chic restaurant cafés and the most cosmopolitan shops. To quote a phrase, the Malate neighborhood is "looking more SoHo than hobo."

In a way, Malate has become a gay and risqué version of a 21st century urban planner's dream: a community where the social fabric is held together not by the coercion of the law, but by the influence of an irreverent, and sometimes, rebellious creative class. A community where the mish-mash of peoples, whether local or newly local, is glued by the notion of life as art, and vice versa. This is reflected in how Malate's bohemian ideology is able to meld seamlessly with the traditionally conflicting notion of free enterprise.

In an informal roundtable discussion, world traveler Sonny Zablan spoke to Markus Schmidt, Colin Mackay and DJ Montano, three of Malate's most influential citizens, about their perspectives of the brow-raising neighborhood. Schmidt, Mackay and Montano are the prime movers of the ON Collective, a collaboration of friends, colleagues and creative types aimed at positioning Malate as a destination which offers an alternative to the generic, commercial destination places in Manila.

Zablan, himself a bohemian-turned-entrepreneur, focused on questions about the Malate nightlife district and what makes it different from the "de-mallified" shopping centers of Makati. Ultimately, the discussion strove to answer the oft-repeated question, "So what is Malate doing right?"

Let's begin by asking: Why Malate? I mean it's rather raw. What is its attraction?

Colin Mackay: When I came to the Philippines and started looking for a place to set up a business, the first place I went to was Makati. It seemed that everything centered around malls in Makati. The malls were the focal point of everything. So when I went looking for a sight, I went to the malls. But for me, it didn't seem like the right kind of environment.

Markus Schmidt: So we started looking in and around the smaller streets of Makati. These included the San Lorenzo area, Pasay Road, Jupiter, you know... But they were all so messy and rundown, and there was no real feel to the street.

CM: So we came back to Malate and had a look because of John Glenn. As a group, we were also attending our friend John Glenn's parties in Blue Café. And every time I looked at Makati, I always met some sort of landlord from hell. They were always thinking, how can I make some money out of this? It was like either you gave a whole year in advance, or six months, or all this bullshit. And of course, there were all these things about [rent] escalation. I felt like a kid who was being dragged up to a headmaster.

But when I asked the landlord in Malate, she was clueless (laughter). It was just the rent... And it was much more my style.

DJ Montano: Well, for me there's the business side of it. It's a lot cheaper to open something up in Malate. There are also fewer rules to live with. But essentially, Malate is it because it's got more character and more freedom. Here, you can do whatever you want with your ideas.

So you were here when things were just beginning to heat up?

DM: We weren't the first establishments in Malate, but the first of the so-called new restaurant and design wave. Yes, we're probably the first among the stylized contemporary establishments around Malate.

CM: When I opened there was just Le Soufflé. We had a themed dinner party where we had a menu tacked to the front door asking, what shall I eat? And then we asked them, Sala or Soufflé? Because there was really no other choice.

In terms of design, my restaurant, Sala, was a reaction to all these rundown, seedy bars with the red lights sitting outside and the leaky aircon hanging out the front window beside the creaky aluminum door. We made Sala more approachable with a clean sophisticated look of a modern restaurant dining room. It was not intended to be a stuffy room for power dining. It was really a reaction to the shock I got when I first went to Manila and walked down Ermita.

So when Sala opened, people said "Wow," we actually made things fresh and clean. It actually changed the concept of what Malate was all about. And it wasn't just Sala, it was also Garlic Rose and Caribana. Caribana said something like, "we want to change your idea of Malate," because they were offering something more conceptualized and focused. Caribana said, "We are a Caribbean restaurant." It wasn't just someplace where you could drink a cold beer. There was always something going on.

MS: If you look at all the establishments set up in the last four or five years, every one has been conceptualized around a very strong theme. And it's not just the look of the place, but the food and whole style of the establishment. People say that here, we've got a lot more passion going on.

So it's really about creative freedom?

DM: Yeah, because if I just wanted the financial reward, I'd put up something in a food court area and make tons of money. But at the end of the day, what else do you have aside from the money?

CM: If you've got a passion for good food and entertainment, you won't really be satisfied with a food court establishment.

DM: I really wanted a place where I could entertain people.

MS: Live our life the way we want to, basically.

CM: You also have to look at the fact that a lot of us are gay. We're theatrical and a little bit flamboyant, and I think it's a reaction to living in the Philippines where very often things are suppressed and conservative. Here, you're not allowed to be really different.

MS: But in Malate, you're allowed to express yourself.

DM: Just like Madonna! (laughs)

MS: When we started Firma, which I think was a very bold move, there was no boutique of these failed establishments to begin with, they never really had a good grasp of what it took to operate a food business. Most of these places were owned by barkadas who said to themselves, "Hey it'd be fun to run a bar in this place." But they didn't really know about food service and the nitty-gritty of operations. I mean, they had it coming. They were bound to fail to begin with.

CM: It's also because of the fact that Malate's a destination, it's not a place where there's just passing trade. A lot of those who set up businesses here thought that their places would succeed simply because there were a lot of people in the area. They didn't realize that the people who hung out in the street are transient and fickle. They have no loyalty. Whereas those who came here day in and day out knew exactly where they wanted to go.

You really have to market yourself and offer something else, because otherwise, people won't be wasting their time going to Malate when they could just find a drink somewhere in Makati.

So creativity is key to succeeding in Malate?

DM: Creativity in how you maintain loyalty. For instance, you cannot focus on restaurant you know where you see the owners serving drinks at the bar in their Pradas and their Guccis?

MS: There should also be a lot of passion. You should never look at a restaurant business just as a money-making thing. If you want to make a lot of money, open a franchise (laughs).

Malate is not known just for its food but for its nightlife. How are your establishments a part of the whole Malate experience?

DM: When I opened Acquario, I had the idea of attracting the hetero crowd to Malate. This I suppose was a reaction to Joy, which was really a gay hangout. It worked for a while. Straight people started coming in, but then other establishments opened up.

MS: And now it's a queen bar! (raucous laughter)

DM: I'm still working on it, but in a way, the difference with Malate is that the establishments, the good ones anyway, seem to have a life of their own.

CM: It also has to do with the kind of people coming in and what you're offering. I must admit that there aren't that many people who like going to a stylish establishment where there's soft music; so what you end up doing is picking the volume up and putting some lights in to make it more accessible to people.

Like with Joy, we had to get a DJ and more lights to make it more clubby, even though it was never meant to be a club.

DM: Same with Acquario. We were playing chill and ambient music in the beginning. Now we play Madonna.

CM: Well I can't really say that we didn't have control over the way our establishments evolved. I controlled it quite well in the first few years and I think I just gave up last year. I mean, we had theme parties like masquerades. I always wanted to revolve around very strong themes so it doesn't become just a gay bar.

MS: Or just a gimmick!

CM: Oh, I hate that gimmick concept! For instance, a lot of people usually get motivated to go to a bar that has a "Big Night." But I always ask, what is a big night? What the hell is that? It doesn't say anything. Surely, people can be more discerning than that. That's why we have these theme parties.

But do theme parties still work? Don't people usually want to hang out after work?

CM: I think people like to see spectacles still. And they enjoy when they come to Malate and they see it.

MS: I also organize a lot of parties and I've noticed that the moment that the theme is right and you've done a good job at your inviting and direct marketing, it works. Tessa Prieto-Valdes, for example, just wrote about our Chicago party last week, and she liked it and thought it was nice.

So how would you now position Malate with all the competition coming up behind it?

MS: I guess we have to let the rest of the world know what Malate is all about. There are still so many people who think Malate is a red-light district, or a place where you get mugged, or stabbed and murdered. We have to tell people that Malate is no longer the place it was 20 years ago, especially around Orosa and Nakpil streets where most of the establishments are now.

CM: It always helps if you have a passion for your work and the guests and customers feel it well, simply because our businesses are so personality oriented. People really like the personal touch.

DM: I think we should harp on the fact that you can just go around and get in a restaurant, sit in a lounge and get a drink, and move on after that. The fact that this place has so many different facets to it lends to a complete experience without going through the typical mall door.

So if Malate were a person, who would she be?

DM: Malate's got a lot of history behind her. I mean, we have the centuries-old Malate church, and most of the establishments here are many years old. If I were to relate it to an actress, she would be Sophia Loren, whereas the newer mall centers would be Britney Spears. Sophia Loren may have all these wrinkles and all, but these newbies would not be able to compare with the depth of her character.

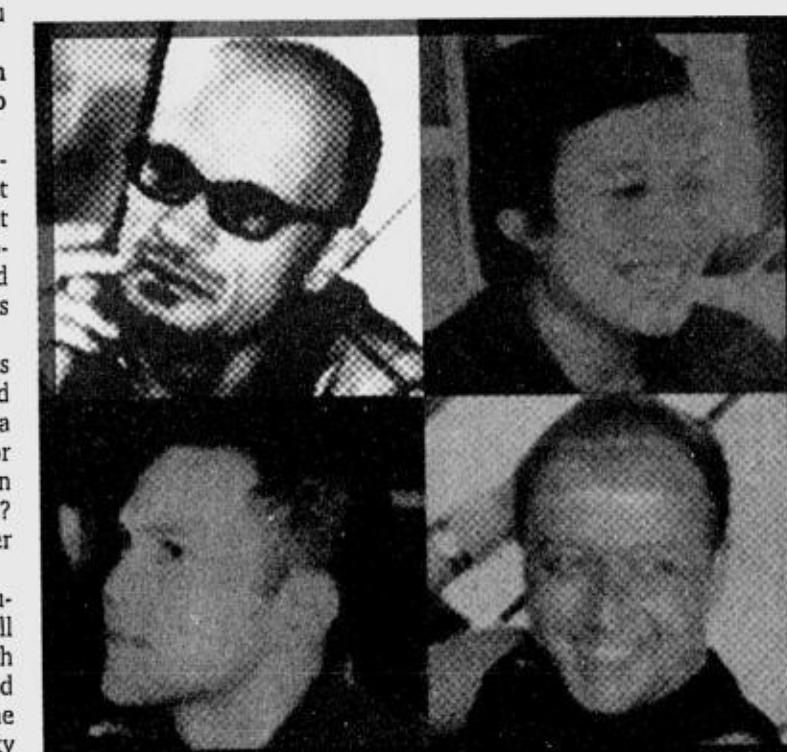

CM: Malate for me is a real person I can relate with. She's probably not perfect, but she has the charms and the bad habits I can identify with, not some "perfect, contrived Disneyland" that you enjoy and forget about because the experience conveyed no real meaning to you. Let's face it, Malate's pretty raw, just like the rest of the country's pretty raw. People have all these airs and graces about Malate being so out there and the hang-outs being so glitz, but outside, the realities of life are there in your face. It's just the same in Makati—cross a few streets from the malls and you have a squatter area. What's so good about Malate is that when you walk the streets here, you know you're in the real world, not something that is contrived in the mind of a faceless urban planner.

MS: I guess that's why we're also very popular with expats and foreigners. They do like the organic, the Old World charms of this area.

I consider Malate real. Confident. Malate, people say, has Old World charm and character, but I think it's also extremely modern. It's extremely loud. It's just a more mature, intelligent place. We don't have "White Men Only" signs. And we don't have dress codes.

So how would you now posi-

MARKUS Schmidt owns the design showcase Firma, a place AsiaWeek once called one of the chicest shops in Manila. Firma runs smack in the middle of Malate's nightlife district, a place peppered with hip bars and trendy restaurants. In November of 2001, Markus opened Fidel, a Moroccan-inspired restaurant that has become the de rigueur dining place in Manila. Before becoming what he describes as a suffering artist, Marcus ran an import export business in the Philippines and Hong Kong.

AFTER finishing culinary studies in Switzerland and working at the Ritz Carlton in Barcelona, DJ Montano decided to pack his bags and go back to good old Malate. After managing a number of dining establishments in the famous nightlife district, DJ decided to put up Raj, an Indian restaurant, then the liquid lounge Acquario. DJ's newest culinary venture is the newly opened Courtyard, Cuisine Chinois.

COLIN Mackay is one of the pioneers in the current wave of Malate entrepreneurs. His raucous drag shows at Joy has made him "The Authority" when it comes to Malate entertainment. Aside from the now legendary Joy, Colin still runs People's Palace and Sala, one of the first stylized restaurants in Malate. He just opened a new Italian restaurant, also in Malate. It's playfully called Mamma.

VINTAGE MALATE

Ino Manalo muses with nostalgia and longing about where glamour slithers into sleaze—and back

WE know that places exist in time and in space. But they also exist in the mind, in the recesses of memory. Malate is one such place. It represents many things to many people.

Malate is a collage of images, some half-remembered, others half-forgotten. There are those whose Malate is a quiet neighborhood of old 1950s houses dozing in the shadows of a past era. To others it is a garish strip of bars, the site of frantic couplings and uncouplings deep into the night. Malate is all of this and much more.

The district started almost as an afterthought, an area that just happened to be near the main settlements of Manila. Its name is supposed to have come from the Tagalog maalat, or "salty." This was in reference, perhaps, to the ponds of sea water that would form in the swamplands along the shores of this corner of Manila Bay. It was the site of a church that later became known for housing the statue of Our Lady of Remedies, which was brought in from Spain in 1624.

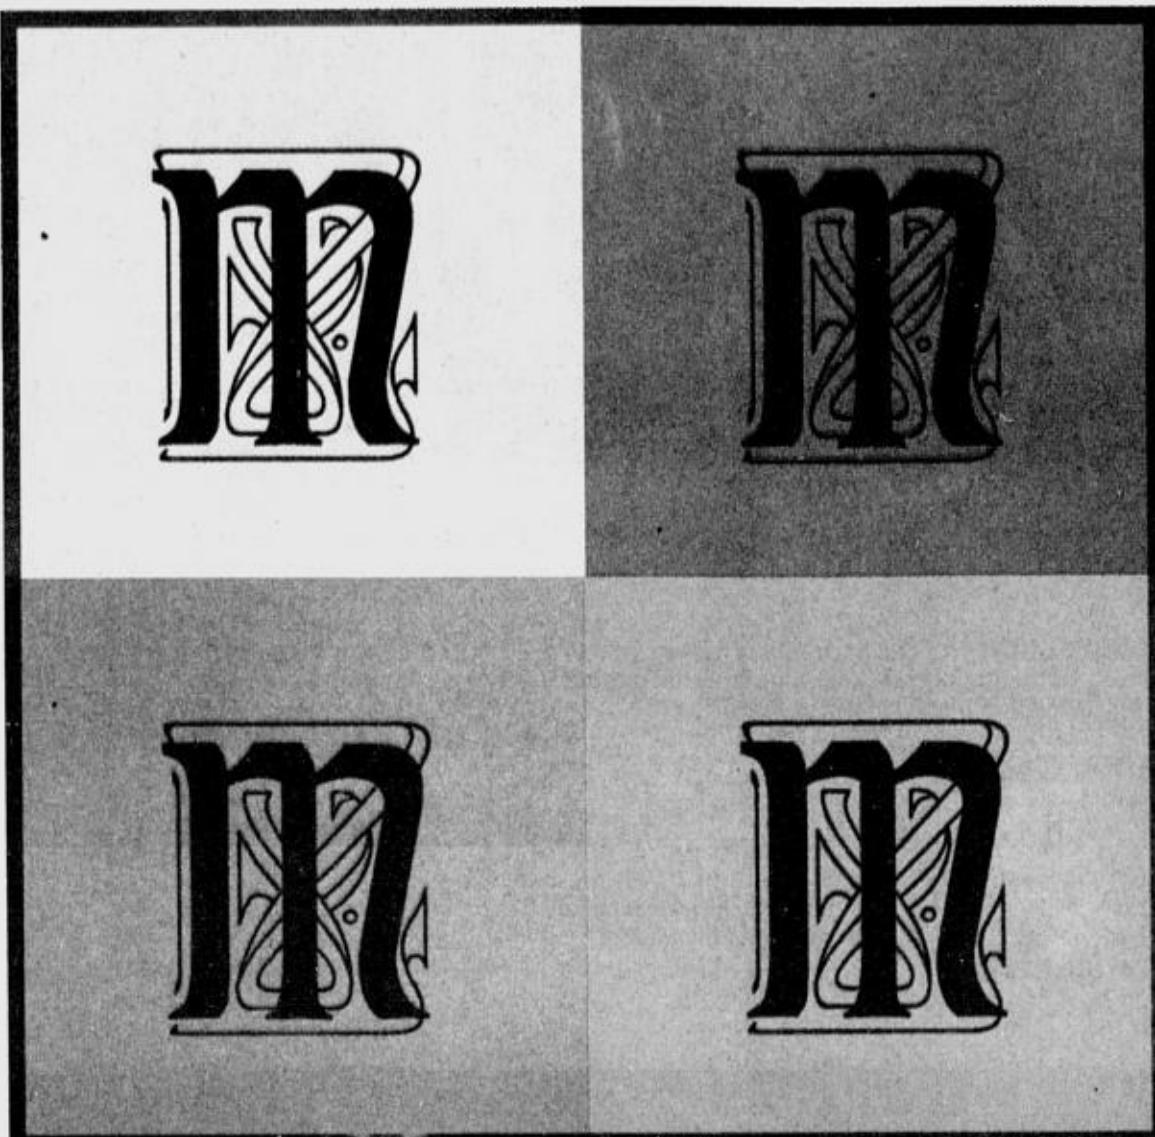

In the American Period and well into the decades after World War II, Malate was a genteel place filled with genteel people. I recall visiting my cousins on Vasquez street, spending the night and waking up to elaborate breakfasts.

Today one can still see glimpses of gracious homes part Beaux Arts, part Southern plantation. Perhaps what fueled all this gentility was the presence in the area of the country's upper-class schools, among them St. Ildefonso, La Salle, Ateneo, Assumption and the University of the Philippines.

It was always one of the treats of my childhood to visit the tree-shaded campus of Assumption (which, strictly speaking, is in Ermita) when everyone still called its location Herran.

I suppose part of my childish fascination derived from the street's name, which, to my mind, always managed to bring up images of the Middle East. Of course, it was later pointed out to me that Assumption's address had nothing to do with the capital of the country beside Iraq. Yet, there was much else that was satisfying about that old campus, from the pleasant old buildings with their flecked walls, the long corridors, the grassy lawns, all evoking an era more sedate and even generous.

The Herran campus is gone now. In its place is another bland mall. But a little of that past grandeur can still be seen in another of Malate's best features: its lovely prewar apartments.

These are the last bastions of a lifestyle of large rooms, wooden floors, quaintly rickety elevators and, most of all, elegantly high ceilings. Syquia, Rama, Rosaria—the names call to mind a gentler time.

I recall visiting Joey Reyes at his flat in South Syquia Apartments. Though he was only renting, Joey commissioned Jim Tan to go to town with his flat. The result was at once playful and avant-garde. I remember lattice cutouts in geometric shapes. But most of all, I can still vividly remember a large border marking off an alcove. Joey explained that he had installed the border so that when he sat in front of the alcove, his image would be nicely framed for maximum effect. He was right. I still remember Joey's production design.

Perhaps it was the presence of such distinguished interiors that attracted the artsy, creative crowd to Malate. Of this set, the most prominent were the fashion designers. Many of the fashion world's great institutions had their shops in the area. Many of these still live here.

Presumably, the presence of the shops and its clientele insured an audience for another Malate institution: Café Adriatico. These days, cafés with dark wooden interiors, antique tables, old prints are commonplace. But when it opened, Café Adriatico was something to celebrate. In a way it was a distillation of Malate: somewhat tattered yet comfortable like an old book or shoe, distinguished but relaxed, filled with a brash currency rooted in the confidence of tradition. This may be one reason branches of this Malate institution did not succeed in other parts of the city.

In fact, the antiquarian atmosphere of the café was something that its owner, Larry Cruz, cultivated carefully. A friend of mine still speaks of the afternoon he spent with Larry just watching the sunlight fall on a newly painted wall to check if the color was right.

Since the café is open 24 hours, it is where many a night on the town ends over a breakfast of eggs, fried rice and spare ribs. But a past generation will testify that there was a time when such nights began in still another Malate landmark: Ernest Santiago's Coco Banana. Actually, Coco marked many beginnings. It was probably one of the first places in all of Manila that allowed you to dance with your partner of choice and sex. For many then, Coco was the place to finally let yourself go, to break free, to come out, to dance until you sweated.

I recall many anguished hours just finding the nerve to go to Coco. Yet, arriving at the place, there was always that electric charge of anticipation: Who would be there tonight? Who would we see? Who would we meet? I suppose many others shared that feeling for their collective longings suffused the air with an energy both sordid and cleansing. I will never forget sitting on the floor watching the Coco Cats perform a number from "West Side Story" and being so moved by the talent, the force, the sheer audacity that comes from being able to look life in the face.

It is this energy that the present denizens of Malate, the many new cafés, bars and shops, have inherited. For Malate remains the place where squatter houses rise beside restaurants with chic pared-down interiors, where the old is transformed into the cutting edge. It is the place where glamour slithers into sleaze. Perhaps it is this unabashed, unexplained contrast that gives Malate its sting so different from the uniformity of a Makati or a Megamall.

It is the place to dance in the street until the world becomes only the memory of sweat, salty on our tongue... or later, much later, on another's skin.

TALK N TEXT

RISQUÉ MALATE

JR Isaac goes through his ZIP (Zany and Interesting Personality) list and asks 'What turns you on about Malate?'

I LOOK forward to going to Malate and settling down in my favorite bar Fidel on weekends because I have fun with the shop talk of all the creative people who go there. The progressive attitude sends out good electricity.

RM DE LEON

Malate is a cornucopia of assaulting elements. Malate transcends religious, societal boundaries; it's good for the soul.

ANGELINA COCKRELL

Malate is hip yet accessible and definitely relaxed. The only place with a soul in Manila.

JUAN CHUA

Malate is a cross-section of society. Distinct but united in culture.

BIEN BENITEZ

It has an inimitable and unpretentious atmosphere. It's got style and soul!

MIGUEL ROSALES

Three things: the frenetic energy of the place; the "anything-goes, throw-caution-to-the-wind" attitude of those who frequent the area; and Fidel's vodka martini.

RICKY DAVID

No inhibitions.

MIKO VALENZUELA

The interesting characters that you meet and surreal incidents that occur are uniquely Malate.

CELINE LOPEZ

The mood of the people and the place. In Malate, people want to have fun. You feel that there are no boundaries or limits, no one is bound by what is "proper." In Malate, it's about letting yourself go, giving in to your desires and enjoying it at the same time. In Malate, it's okay to be who you are because everyone there celebrates exactly that!

TINA TINIO

I can wear anything and do anything... well, almost!

ANA ABAD SANTOS

The frenzy, the in-your-face attitude, and the relaxed morals.

JIM TAN

The way reality breathes there. The space-time tells you how earthly it is to savour and enjoy a drink in an area glorified.

Is it you on in Malate?

What turns me on is its character and its attitude. It has no inhibitions, no pretensions. You can be what you want to be without feeling left out. It can be simple and grand at the same time. The whole Malate creates its own feel just like a chameleon. And when a person sets foot in Malate, he creates his own feel, just like Fantasy Island. The feeling of oneness just like a family and the feeling of freedom and familiarity.

RAOUL RAMIREZ

Because people in Malate like to live outside the safe and the predictable, because they like to live on the edge and sometimes court danger. And the place—sexy! Plus, it has no pretensions; it is intelligent, bohemian, witty and downright raunchy, if you know what I mean!

BART GUINGONA

The sense of possibility and the air of transgression.

CARLO TADIAR

Does the world really need another mall? But Malate... small streets, antique shops, art deco buildings, great food, hobbits, honey. Now we're talking neighborhood.

BABY AND COCO ANNE

I think because it is more relaxed and also because Cocoy at Fidel and Erwin at Acquario play music of the '70s and '80s as well as contemporary dance music better than anybody else.

ANDREW GAN

Aside from the obvious, it's that contagious bohemian vibe that makes all inhibitions obsolete.

LEICA CARPO

Its bohemian character! Nowhere else can you party with people from all the social strata—from people in slippers to those in Manos! Malate is a great social equalizer.

ERIC BERBERABE

The freedom, the sense of adventure, the up-for-anything attitude that almost everyone seems to project. It's not stiff like other places. It's not a place to see and be seen. It has its own charm and vibe.

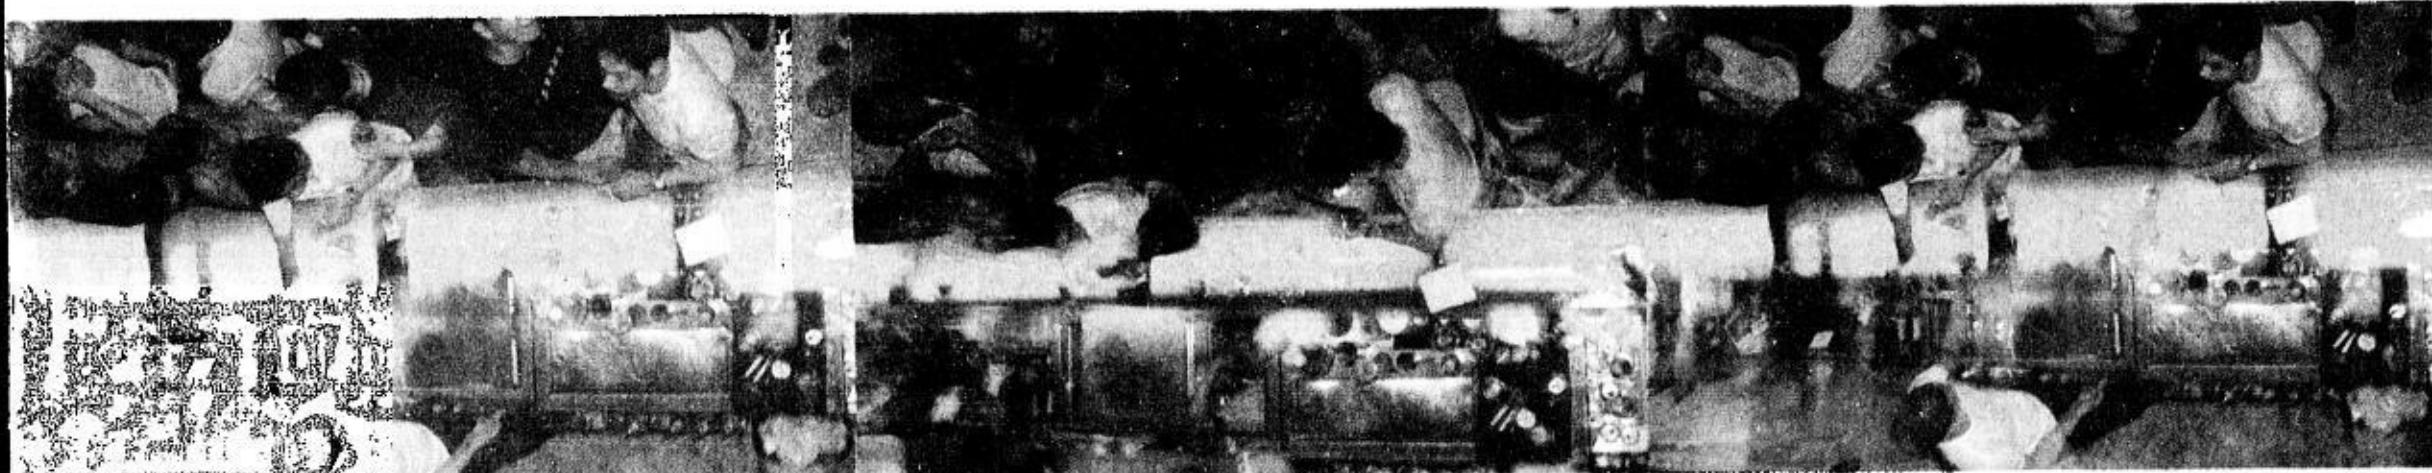

ANDY VASQUEZ PRADA

Malate is the most socially democratic place there is. Where else do doñas strut with drag queens, and businessmen brush elbows with business boys on the street? And they all feel equally at home on Nakpil as they step from Firma to Fidel, Verve to Bargo, Sala to Spirits.

DON ESCUDERO

What really turns me on is, to wash away your sins then committing them all over again, in last night's "Redemption" post-Holy Week party in BED!

JAY SANTOS

MENU MALATE

DJ Montano samples the district's culinary variety

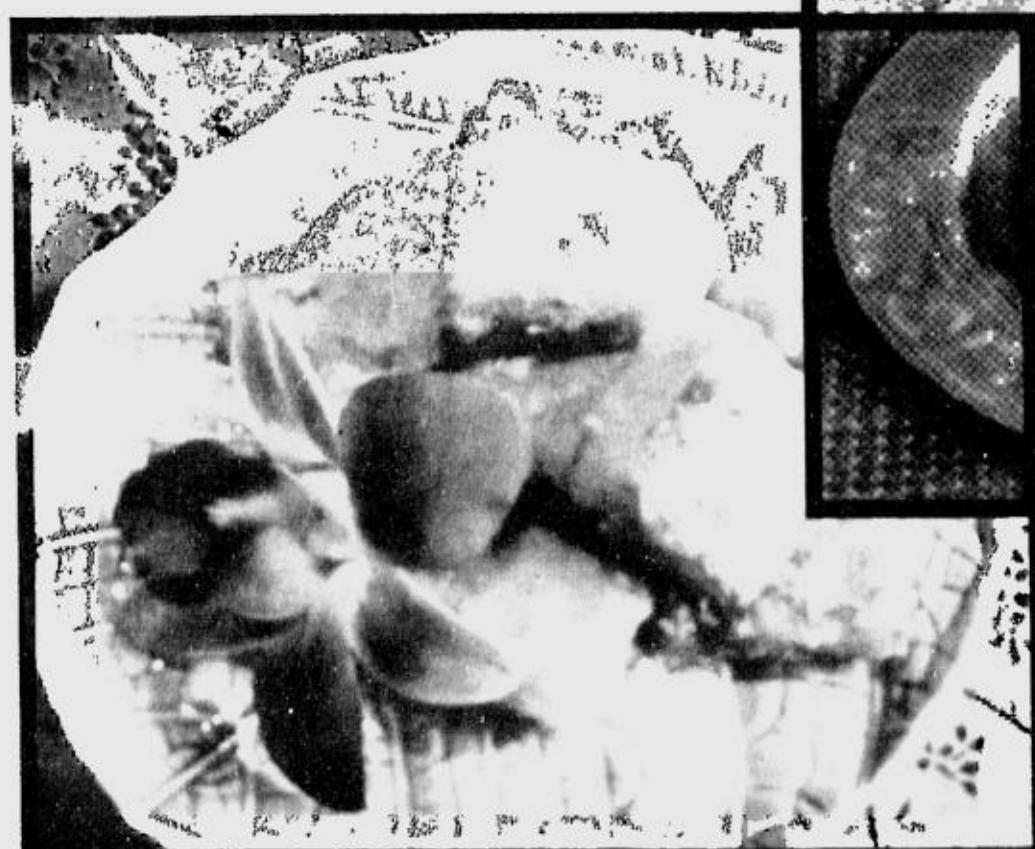

ARAM Masala (curry powder in most kitchens) in Indian cuisine is an essential element in most dishes. Without it, lamb curry would just be stewed lamb. In analogy, a dollop of sour cream without caviar would just be a dollop of sour cream. Nam Pla (fish sauce), an ingredient that gives the flavor to Pad Thai, also applies as such to Thai cooking, as is Charmoula (fresh herb paste) to Moroccan cooking. On the Western front, a good stock or broth will taste flat without a bouquet garni (an herb packet) while most western sauces regard béchamel as the mother of sauces. It used to be that such condiments could only be prepared or found in their authentic forms from their native origins, but that is no longer true nowadays.

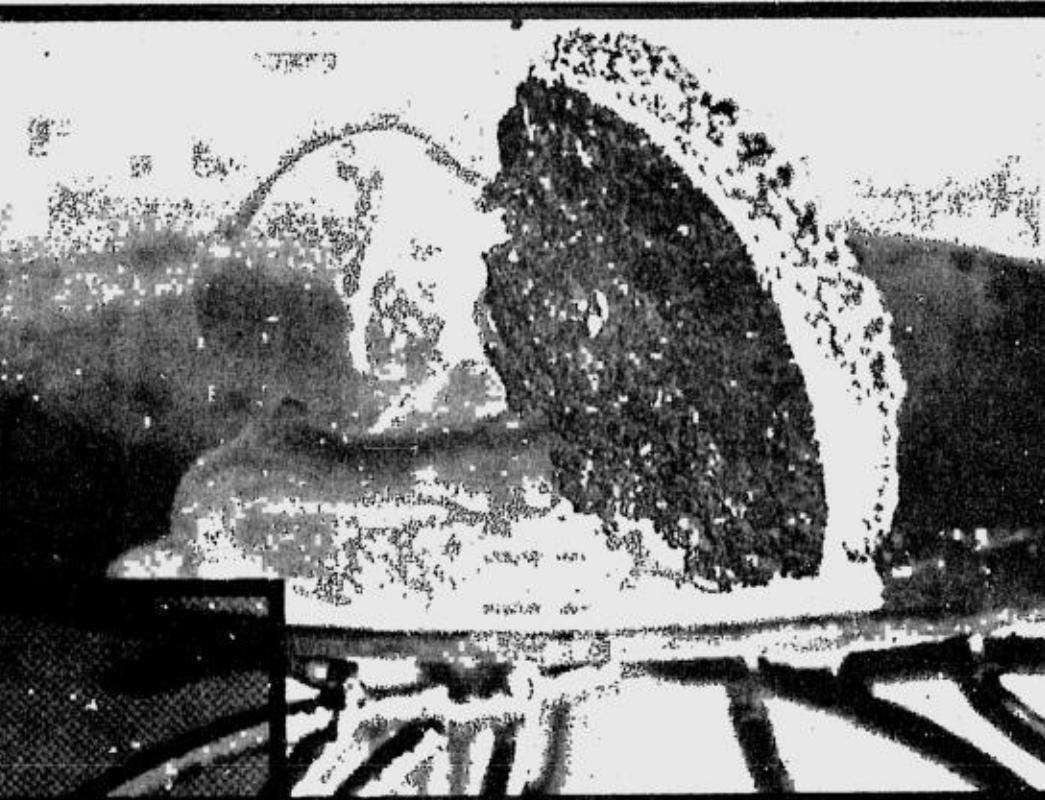

THE CITY of Manila is one example of a diverse culinary landscape. Filipinos, in general, just love to eat. In downtown Malate, it's easy to find a great variety of innovative and authentic dining establishments. Its Old World charm and bohemian spirit has made it a natural breeding ground for creative cuisine—much like Paris' finer restaurants are found in the historical district of Marais.

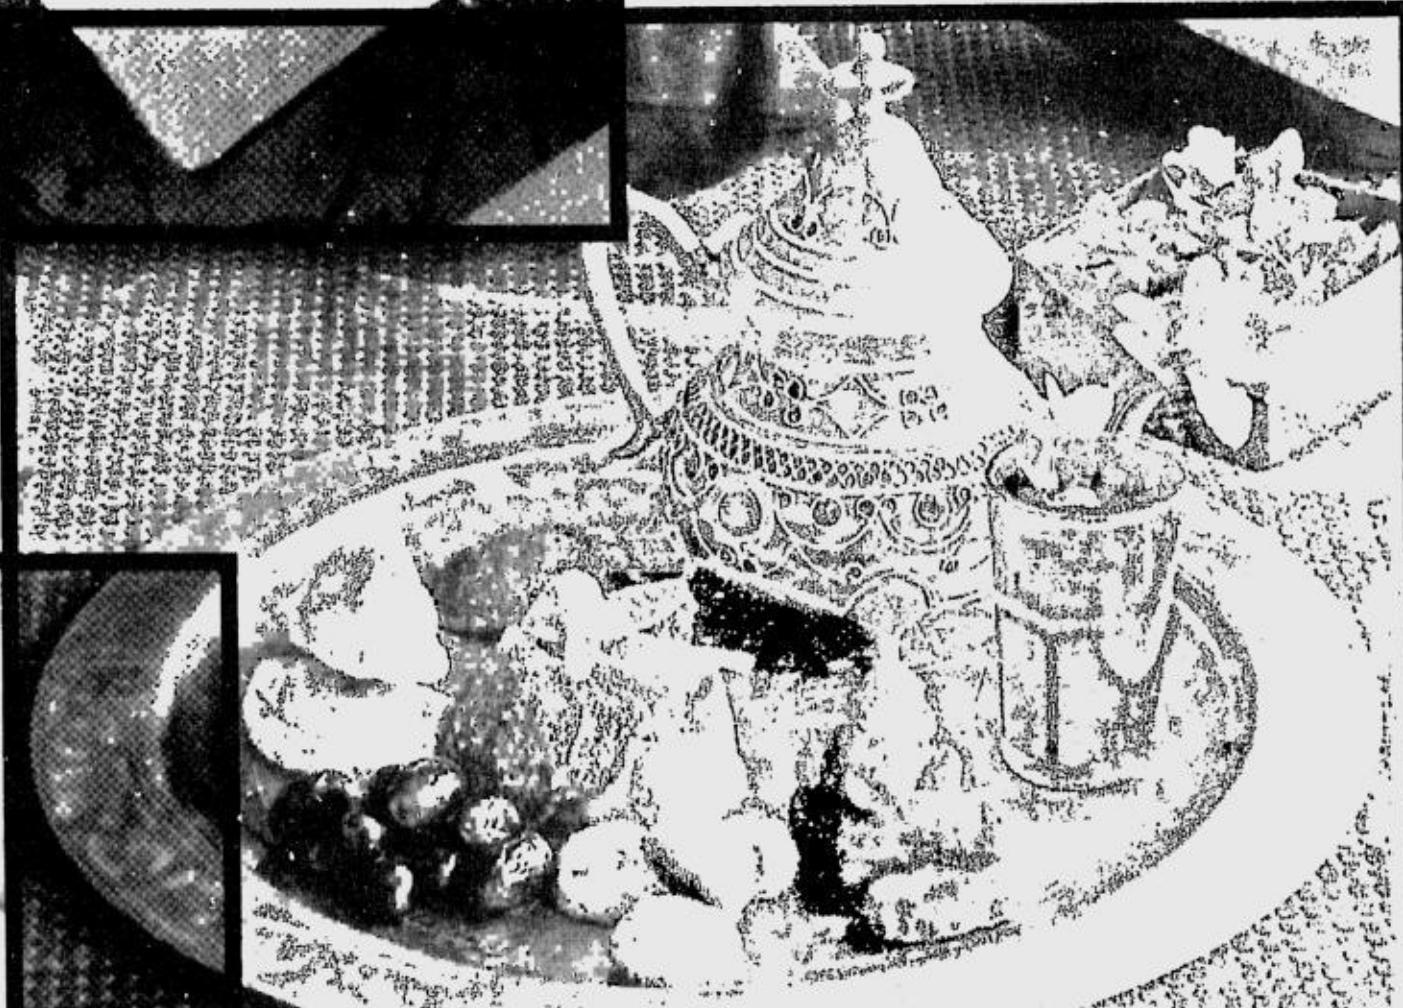

ON A VENACULAR perspective, many believe that some of the best Filipino cuisine can be found in an establishment very near the historic Malate Church. A walk down the side of Mabini and one can find a small Japanese noodle house serving the metro's heartiest soba broths. It's not surprising then for the city's most discerning food enthusiasts to often find their way to Malate to satiate their tastes.

MUCH has been said about the world becoming more and more connected and how everything can be found everywhere nowadays. This definitely holds true for cuisine. I'm certain this will raise a few objections, but the best crudité may no longer be found in France, nor the best chutney in India. A Singaporean may find the most delectable Hainanese chicken in a nondescript restaurant in the meat-packing district of New York. A German lady may proudly state that she saw the most savory Konigsberger Klopse in a Hong Kong diner in Kowloon.

MALATE counts an influential population of foreigners who have called it their home and have set up their own restaurants, infusing them with their foreign tastes and styles. In the Malate neighborhood, one can find great comfort in not having to travel to Bangkok to find galangal, a rhizome that tastes like half-ginger and half-black pepper, used in its fresh form in a local Thai restaurant. On the same Malate street, it is truly precious to discern saffron, a spice worth its weight in gold, used generously in a Spanish restaurant's prized marinara. On another corner, diners at a French Moroccan restaurant have always been delighted to find their lamb tagine actually served in what else—a tagine. About a block away, a Korean lady is infamous for jealously guarding the secret to her fiery kimchi and tender bulgogi.

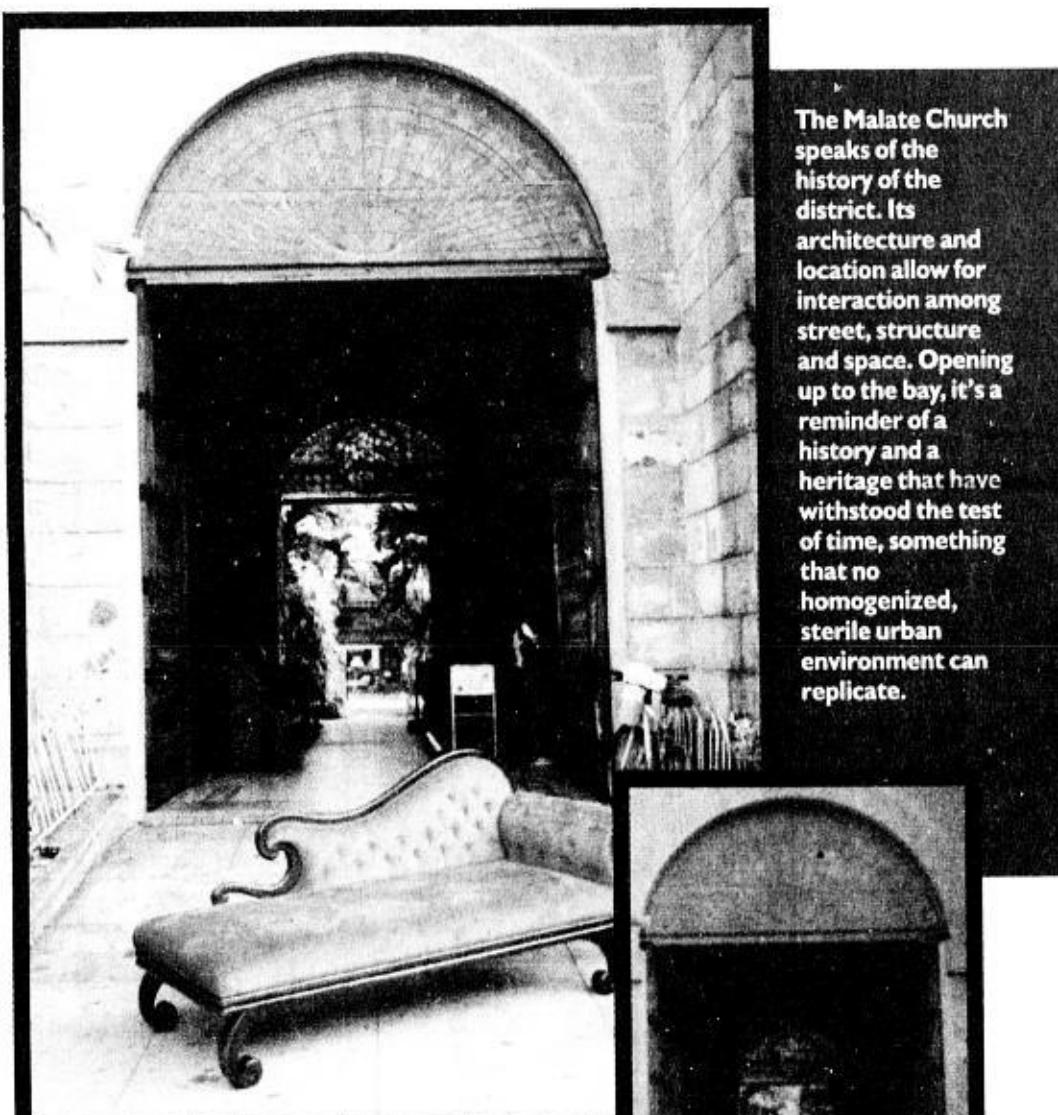

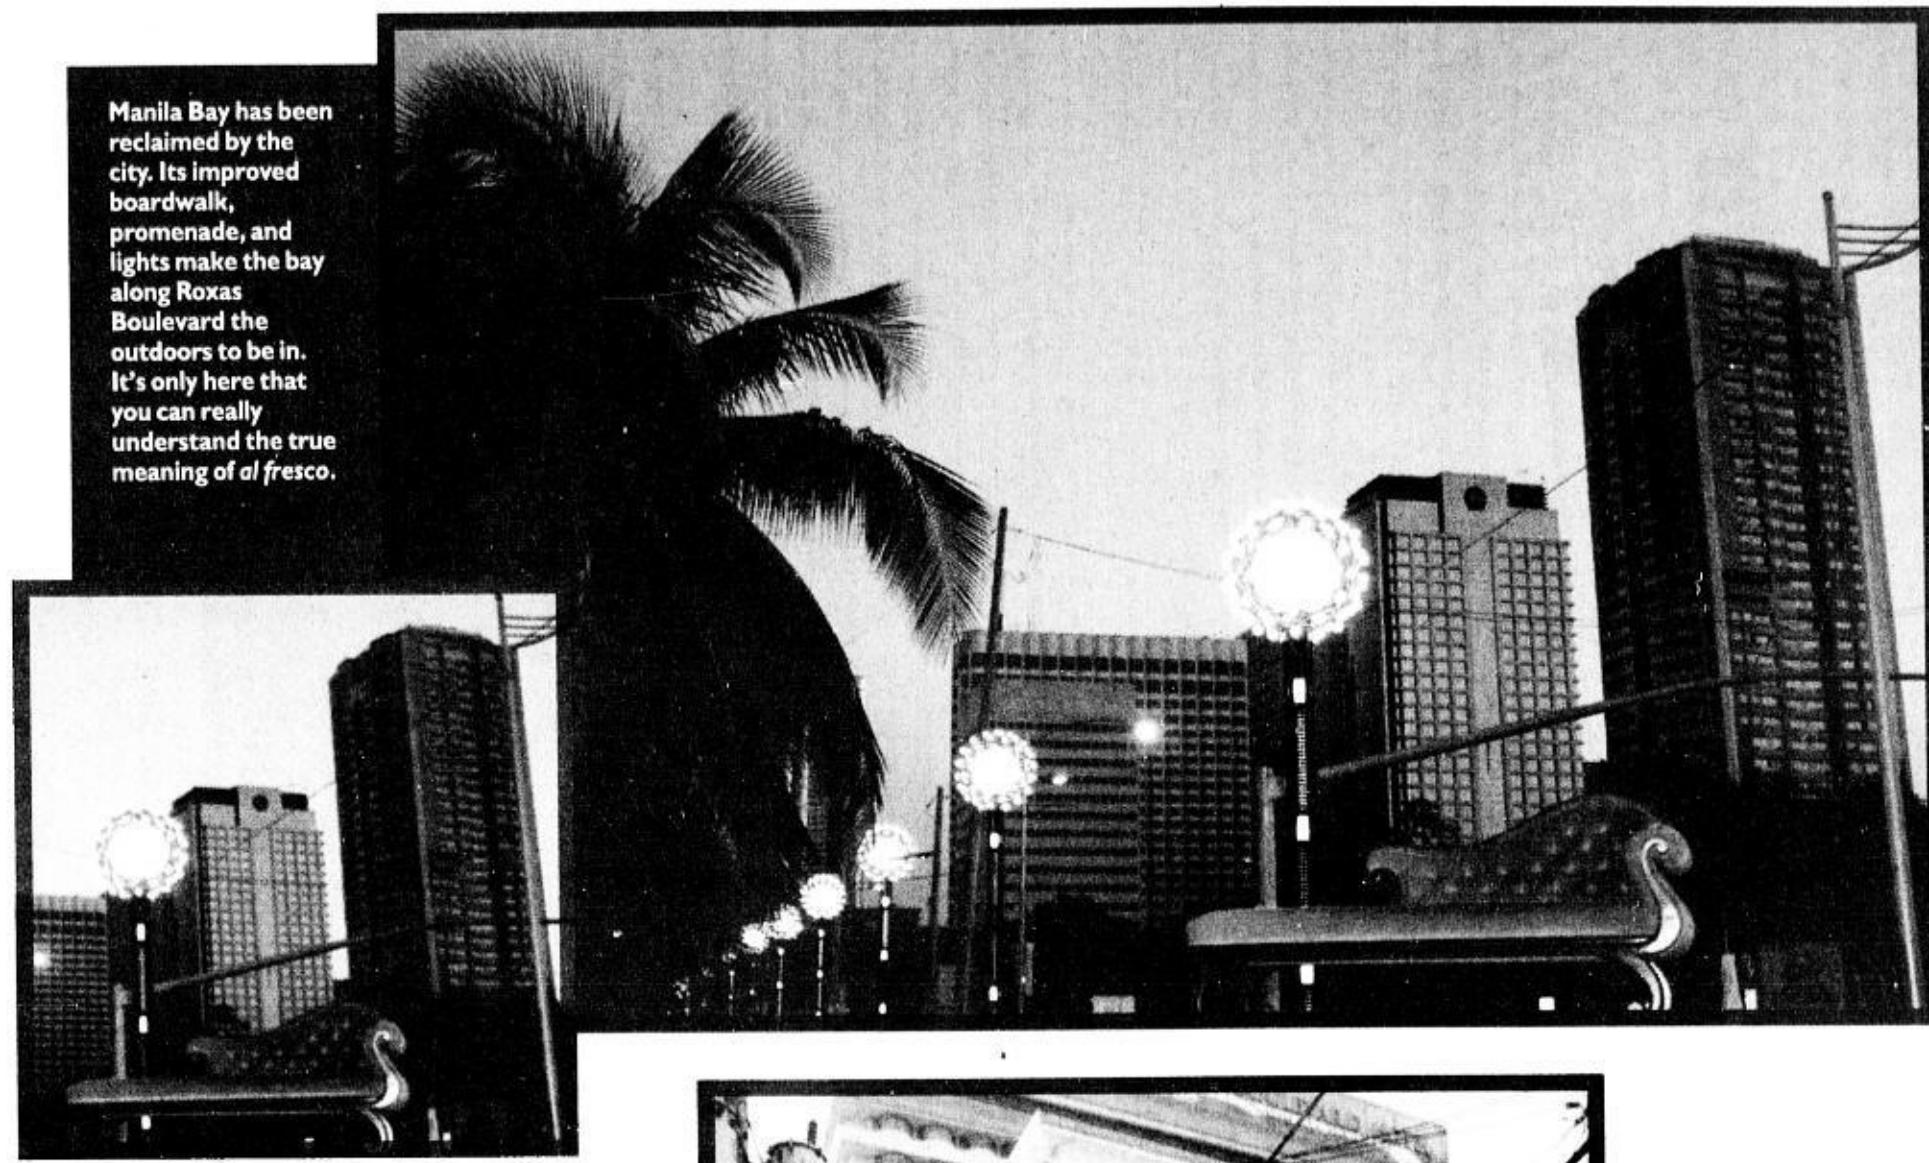

NOWADAYS, a profuse number of choices are offered to every diner; when about two decades ago, one had to travel great distances to experience the authentic. Such is the result of giving the culinary enthusiast mobility, access to information and resources about world cuisine. It also has a lot to do with the vast migration of people to other countries, thus bringing with them their own culinary delights. This is, presently, a great privilege that one hopes would never be ignored or taken for granted.

DIVAN MALATE

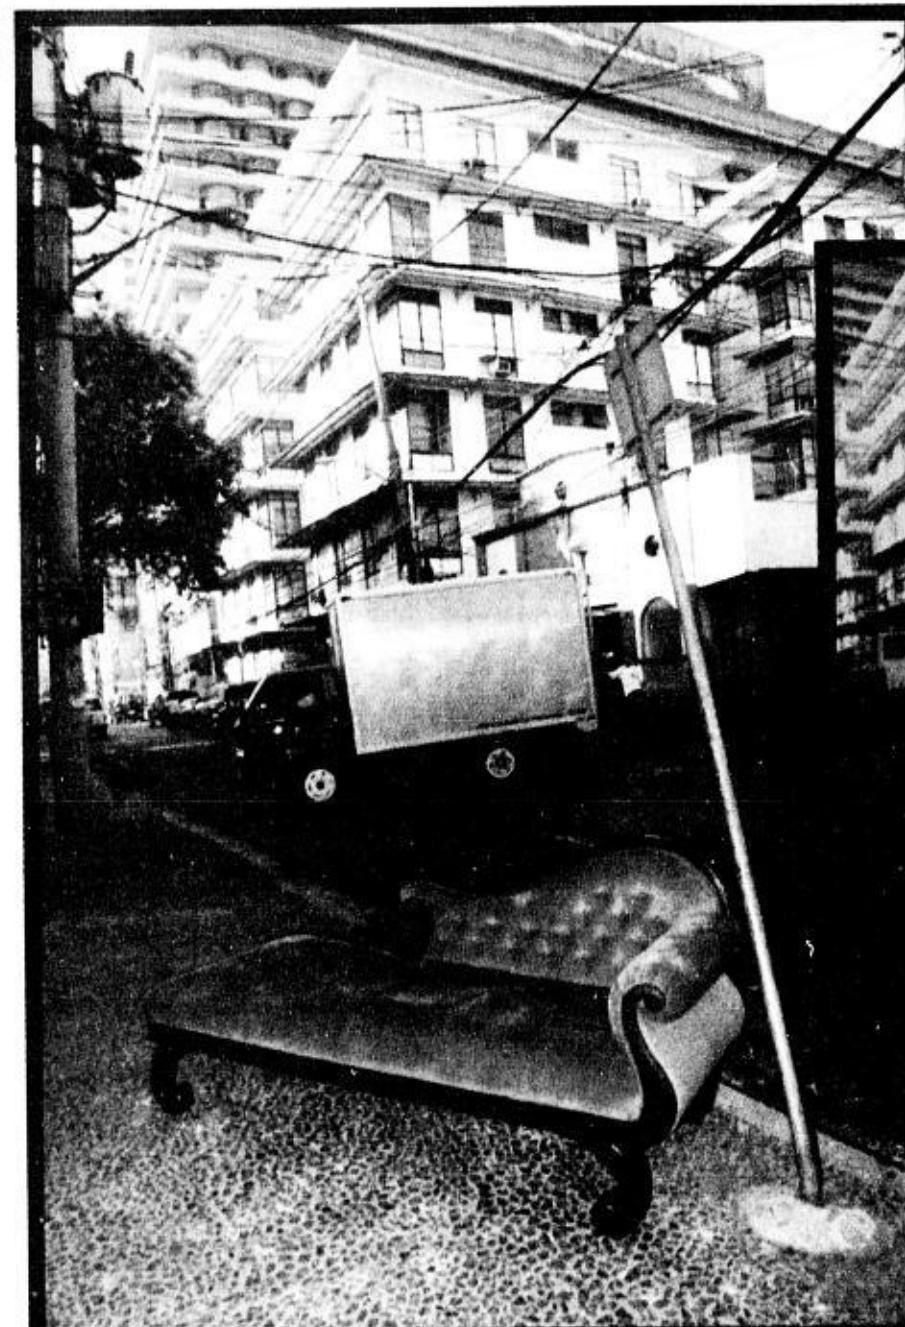

Firma's BoBo chaise-longue journeys from dawn till dusk

Malate is a place that expresses urbanity in its truest form, without homogeneity and artifice. From the streetscape to the plazas and restaurants, Malate allows one to enjoy the theater of the street.

Manila Bay has been reclaimed by the city. Its improved boardwalk, promenade, and lights make the bay along Roxas Boulevard the outdoors to be in. It's only here that you can really understand the true meaning of al fresco.

The Malate Church speaks of the history of the district. Its architecture and location allow for interaction among street, structure and space. Opening up to the bay, it's a reminder of a history and a heritage that have withstood the test of time, something that no homogenized, sterile urban environment can replicate.

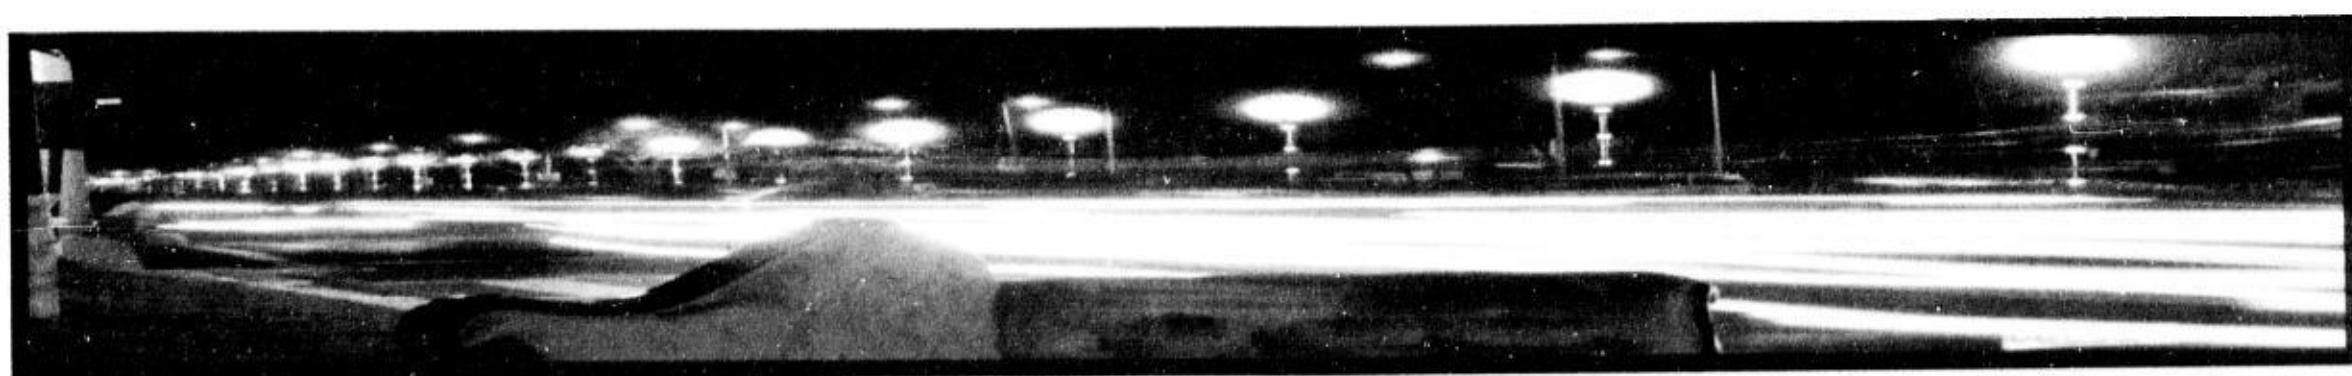

The streets of Malate exude a strong historical character, a mix of different architectural styles. The street comes alive at night, transformed into an arena that is public, pedestrian and fun.

The new Rajah Suliman Plaza fountain enlivens the area, creating a firm connection with Manila Bay. The refurbished plazas continue a tradition set in the Spanish times. It's great to see people outside enjoying the breeze and the night sky, away from air-conditioned malls and cinemas. Parks are, after all, for people. And where is this more evident than in Malate?

Malate consists of exciting contrasts that allow for individual expressions, collectively creating a unique identity. Its history, commerce, and activity add up to the pageantry that is truly Malate.

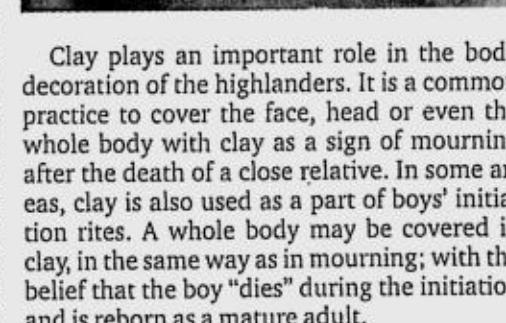

Body art at the last frontier

mixed with water or tree-oils, clay, chalk and burned ochre are still used, synthetic more vibrant and brighter colors are commonly featured, or mixed with the natural ones. Imagination seems to have no boundaries; plastic, labels and various odds such as photos of politicians have found their way to this elaborate form of body decoration.

Each color may have a particular symbolic meaning and the selection of colors is unique for each clan. For example, red—the color of blood—has a special potency and is considered magical. Among the tribes of Mendi, in Southern Highlands, tribes interpret certain face patterns like an oracle. They paint a young girl's face half-black and half-red—the black half symbolizing the spiritual future for her clan, the red the future economic prosperity of her group. In case the colors blur during the subsequent dancing, this is considered a bad omen.

Among the most magnificent and finest forms of body decoration in Papua New Guinea is practiced by the Huli tribe of the Southern Highlands province. The wigs of Huli men are made of human (male) hair. In order to obtain the hair, young boys are sent to a "spirit house" in a deep jungle for a few months. They are looked after by an elderly man of the clan, who provides the boys with a diet consisting of hair-growth stimulating herbs. Once the hair has grown long enough, the elderly man cuts the hair and weaves it into wigs and ochre color is finally added. During special ceremonies the wigs are transformed into platforms for some of the most elaborate headdresses in the world made of birds of paradise or cockatoo feathers, marsupial fur, daisies, insects and assorted shells, beads and bones. Sometimes even western culture's glittering, Christmas decorative ornaments may be added.

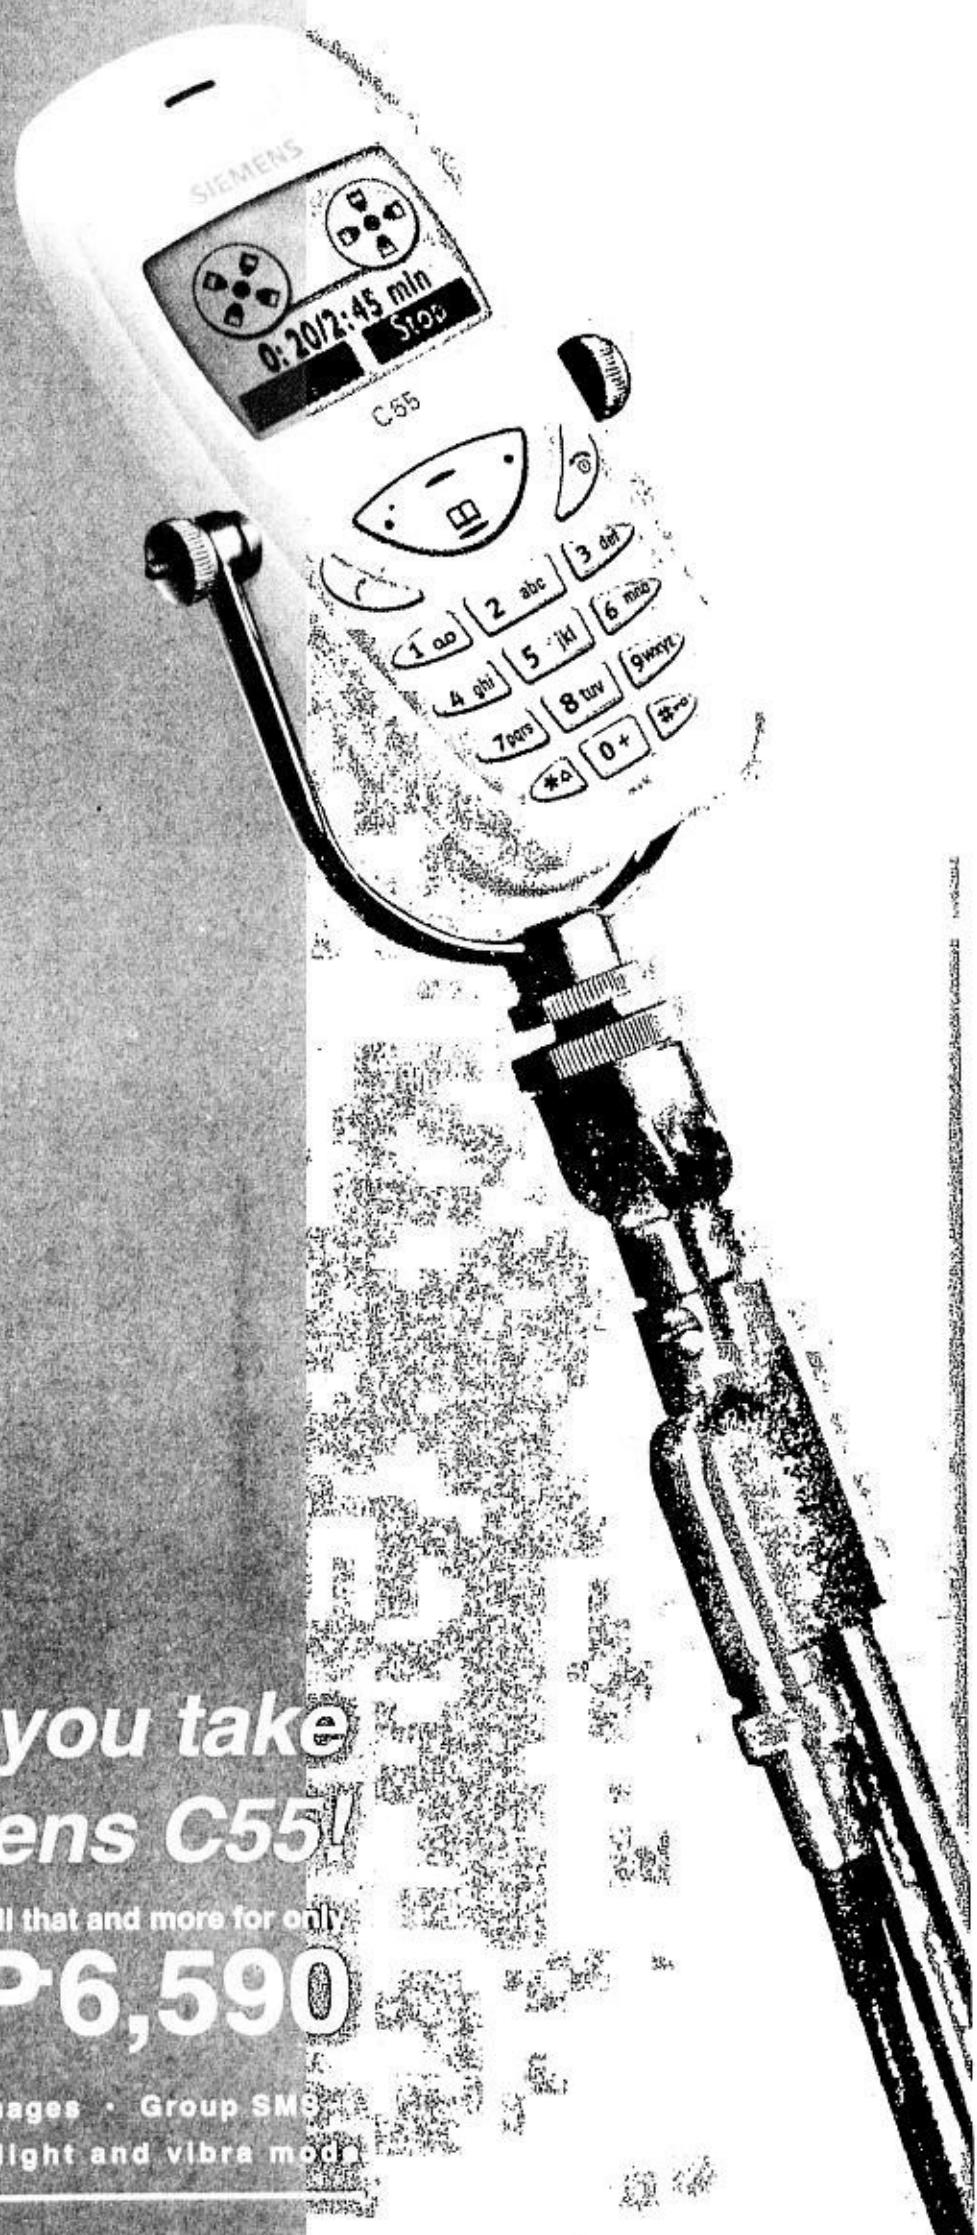

Clay plays an important role in the body decoration of the highlanders. It is a common practice to cover the face, head or even the whole body with clay as a sign of mourning after the death of a close relative. In some areas, clay is also used as a part of boys' initiation rites. A whole body may be covered in clay, in the same way as in mourning; with the belief that the boy "dies" during the initiation and is reborn as a mature adult.

The men of Asaro Valley in the Eastern Highlands province have developed clay decorations into a remarkable form of art. According to a legend, once, when their village was attacked and they were outnumbered, the warriors fled and hid it in the mud of the bank of Asaro River. After some time the river dried on the bodies of the warriors. Seeing the clay-encrusted figures, the enemy mistook them for evil spirits and took flight. Even today, the men of Asaro Valley hold ceremonies to commemorate this incident, which gave birth to the art Asaro mud-men—dancers, who cover their bodies with clay put clay mask over their heads and insert sharpened, bamboo cane finger extensions. As the clay cracks and peels off, it reminds the viewer of a decomposing body.

Like fashion, so evolves the body art of Papua New Guinea. Although Coca-Cola, Ray-Bans and Baywatch have well penetrated even the most remote jungle villages, the tradition of body decoration, remains vibrant. The colors may have changed, the materials and patterns may have become more modern, but the core of artistic expression—the beliefs, the values the identity—remains as strong as ever. It reflects the unique diversity, the richness and pride that the people of Papua New Guinea feel for their culture.

Text gang carouses in Boracay

GLOBE celebrated summer in Boracay. Sun worshippers included Gentxt endorsers Bianca Gonzalez and Evan Santos, Powerboy Greg Martin, model and talk-show host Hans Montenegro, musicians Jimmy Bondoc and Nina, and legendary cager Atoy Co.

During the day, Boracay's long beach was dotted with Gentxt paraws, sailboats bearing Globe's standard G in blue and white, that offered Gentxters free rides across the island.

On April 16, Gentxters converged at Summer Place for the Latin House Sunset Session with Roberto Sanchez and Samba Funk.

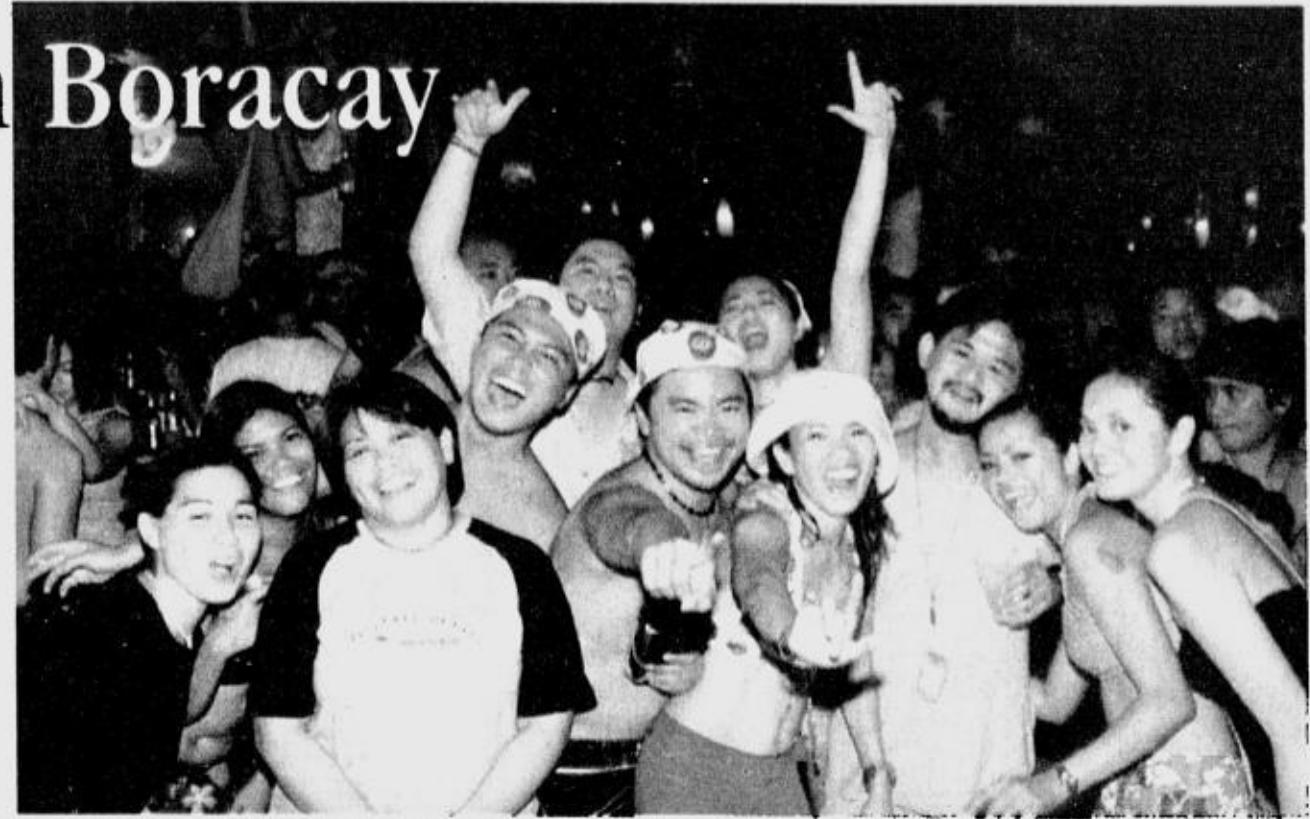

At 10 p.m., DJs Jaco and Cocoy Puyat brought the house down with storming house music and blissful grooves.

At Pier One, music lovers enjoyed popular Top 40 tunes covered by the Next Level.

Gentxters were treated to the events for free by flashing their Gentxt cards, their passport to fun parties and exciting freebies like Gentxt tattoos, backpacks, bandannas, shirts, hats and caps as well as free ice tea from Lipton and friendship bracelets from The Bead Shop. Gentxters also availed of special discounts at Caribo, Barracuda, Charli's, Wreck, Little Mango, Secs in Boracay, Calypso Diving and Aquarius Diving.

April 17 featured electronics fused with classic samba at Summer Place courtesy of Latin Canteen's Brasilia, featuring Carlo Ching, while R&B lovers were dazzled by a concert giv-GLOBELINES, the landline phone service of Globe Telecom, celebrated Easter Sunday with "The Big Easter Circus."

Activities were held in two separate venues, the Mandarin Oriental Hotel and the Rockwell Power Plant, both in Makati City.

At the Mandarin, the event featured exciting games, raffles, bazaar, a circus show and the traditional Easter egg hunt. Easter bunnies and circus performers accompanied the children to the egg-painting contest, face paintings, caricaturing and henna tattoos.

Activities at Rockwell included magic and puppet show, juggling acts and a snare-a-pet contest.

No end to adventure

BLINDING-WHITE sand (and sandbar in the background)
at high noon

Text and photos by Elizabeth Lolarga
Contributor

WHILE armchair-traveling through the Discovery Channel, I once stumbled on a quote from Jawaharlal Nehru: "There is no end to the adventures that we can have."

Yes, the jaded beach comber will be surprised to find that the 1,000-hectare island of Boracay offers not just the usual aqua sports plus the throbbing (as in a headache) nightlife. Despite SARS, the Davao bombings and the war in Iraq, the resort business in this part of Panay province continues to thrive. Perhaps it is in the attitude of the expatriates and the locals who call the place home.

Originally from Liege, Belgium (also where novelist Georges Simenon came from), Philippe D. Bartholomai, general manager of Fridays Resort on the northern part of Boracay where the quality of the sand is finest, said overall there had been less than five cancellations, all from Korea and probably stemming from the travel advisory issued by the government there. (By the way, the resort's name also has a literary origin: Robinson Crusoe's aide.)

"Terrorist activities can happen at the center of London or anywhere in the world," Bartholomai said to the members of the Southeast Asian Airlines (SEAIR) media tour group each sipping rich, thick minestrone from a demitasse. "I've been in this country since 1986. I've never had any trouble."

Handsome chef Tom Hines set things straight for the benefit of the group at large by immediately declaring that he is happily married to a Filipino wife and has two children. Was there a sudden lowering of the excitement we exuded when we arrived?

At any rate, Hines trained with Le Souffle's Billy King and worked at Fashion Café. Bartholomai described him as "young, flexible, open-minded." Also: "He improved the presentation of Filipino food. The plain adobo he turned into something nice, but he kept the original taste. For the caldereta, he removed the tiny bones."

MOMENT of solitude in coconut grove

Nevertheless, Hines' appetizer, Yapak yellowfin tuna carpaccio (named after the community where Fridays is located), set my companion Ester, who normally eats whole black peppers, coughing. "[The freshly ground pepper] is in her windpipe," someone said, looking like he was about to apply the Heimlich maneuver on her. Before anyone could make a move, she calmed down. We partook of the Pacific Rim seafood platter consisting of char-grilled salmon, prawn and blue marlin with pumpkin and spinach risotto.

There was a collective gleeful groan when a sampler of the resort's desserts (Fridays has a pastry chef, a rarity on the isle) were served: tiramisu, chocolate enigma and mango cheesecake.

After helping run Manila Polo Club for some years, Bartholomai is relieved to be rid of his blazer and suit and Manila's traffic and pollution. He now walks to work in T-shirt and shorts from his rented place in the island's equivalent of Forbes Park, the houses and villas resting on a hilltop on Diniwid Beach. There, a standard-size Philippine flag flies above a bigger Swiss flag.

At the bar that's spitting distance from the beach, bartender Rex Rentillo (who's been with the resort since 1992), shows off the cocktails that he has concocted and entered in local competitions.

Worth a try (and possibly a hangover) are Fridays' Sunset, his tribute to Boracay's sunset (and consisting of vodka, crème de cacao, melon, Triple Sec, grenadine, calamansi, pineapple and mango); Passport to Paradise (Drambuie, Triple Sec and Baileys); Absolutely Pinoy (vodka, lemon grass, calamansi and brown sugar); Fridays' Punch (vodka, pineapple juice, melon liqueur and Malibu liqueur) and iced tea with a diff—Breezy "T" with Absolut Kurant, Southern Comfort, peach schnapps, calamansi and cranberry juice.

At the Paradise Garden Resort and Hotel, Ester and I found ourselves billeted at the Andrew Lloyd Webber suite of the building dubbed The Greenhouse. (The other suites are named after the Gypsy Kings, Frank Sinatra, Edith Piaf, Harry Belafonte, Julio Iglesias, Kenny G, Louis Armstrong, Neil Diamond, Shirley Bassey, Whitney Houston, Freddie Aguilar and The Platters.)

Before we could croon "Another Suitcase in Another Hall," Thomas Adam, one of the resort's partners, said the names reflected his taste in music. Aguilar, the only Filipino thus honored, promised he would come and hold a concert on the resort grounds.

Jochen Buskowitz, who must get a kick to carry the title Paradise president, has traveled all over the world and been to the beaches of the Caribbean and Spain. But "Boracay is the best I've ever seen," he declared. "I thought of retiring here. I put up a bungalow. At that time there was no street, no power. I built the first swimming pool ever on the island. People thought I was crazy. Why you do that? The sea is just nearby."

That first pool, a simple rectangle perfect for doing laps, is, of all the resort's other pools, the me best. It is Roman-inspired, with the marble statue of an armless female deity at one end, distressed tiles at the bottom and palm fronds breaking the view of a cloudless, blue sky whenever I float on my back.

Just a five-minute walk from the beachfront, the resort has accommodations that borrow from various architectural styles. Buskowitz compared them to a mosaic. His philosophy is not to fill up the space with rooms but to allow space for a garden and the growth of trees.

Reality as we wish it

Text and photos by Abe Florendo
Contributor

THERE are places that seem to be suspended in space, places that are pure and inviolable, spirit more than location, dream more than reality—or what we wish reality should be.

In the Philippines, Palawan in the Southern Tagalog is such a place, and maybe Baguio in the Cordillera, and Isla Naburot, Siargao and Bantayan Island in the Visayas. Closest to the realm of surreal beauty is Boracay, an island in the Visayan Sea detached from the northern tip of Aklan.

But Boracay may not remain inviolate or pristine for much longer (although it still drives hedonists to launch into paroxysms of praise for its tropical pleasures and poetasters to compose hymns to its superb beaches and idyllic villages). If only it stopped being too touristy. If only it had never heard of bikini-open competitions.

Unfortunately, Boracay may yet become synonymous with bikini-open competitions. Indeed, what would be a perfect place to strut your near-naked stuff than this island where everyone feels, or pretends, they are innocents in paradise? The white sand that does not ever get hot under the implacable sun also makes it the best place to hold beach volleyball competitions, such as was held early this month. Events like this are expected to clog the beach, or occasion a minor hysteria when word flies that Bench underwear models Marc Nelson and Aubrey Miles, or some other billboard beauties with larger-than-life cleavages and crotches, have been spotted in a bar or on the beach.

Bohemianism in bikini has become part of the Boracay lifestyle today. It's a sea change from the Boracay lifestyle that backpackers knew in the earlier days, when affordable gourmet dining meant sausage and sauerkraut or pasta with hard-to-obtain cheese at the little eateries run by tanned-to-leather Germans and French (or other foreigners in sando and shorts and scraggly beards who had stayed too long it was too late to return to their jobs and families back home). Then the best place to check in, if you were counting change, was Mila's place whose come-on was "marble bathrooms all throughout." You weren't sure whether it had rooms to sleep in.

In time, with the influx of more and more visitors, both foreign and local, Boracay needed more rooms, more bars, more eateries and shops. Many of the early visitors, who carried bits and pieces of their lives on their backs and thought they could stay on the island forever and keep it their secret, were frightened by the crowds and drifted to other not-so-frequented or-known beaches, like Naburot and Siargao.

Before long Boracay sprouted with chichi resorts with luxurious beachfront hotels (one boasts a golf course) and expensive room rates to match, as well as smaller hotels and inns with airy presumptions. Today there's a total of 1,500 rooms there, adequate off-season but critical during the peak summer and holiday seasons. Shops and eateries and especially bars are beginning to look more and more like the glitzy bars in Libis, not anymore the strictly thatched huts of the early days.

If the fact that Ayala has acquired a huge property along the northern, coral-strewn tip of the island, past Club Panoly (across the bay looms the island of Romblon), does not portend a picture of Boracay as the Riviera or Miami beach of Kalibo, it will certainly mean a Boracay that has gone cosmopolitan in a T-back.

Le Soleil de Boracay is a hotel with a mind to keeping it balanced between rustic and urbane. It is located right in the middle of the 3.5-kilometer stretch of white sand, marked by Boracay Terraces in Balabag to the north and Lorenzo South in Manuk-manuk.

Shopping enthusiasts will be delighted to know that it lies between the arcades recently built by the Elizaldes, where you can buy artistic crafts and enjoy a meal at Louie Cruz's fast-food with off-the-shoulder insouciance, and the talipapa of the natives, where most everyone goes for their sarongs and T-shirts, and their vegetables. For happenings—body-beautiful competitions, outdoor concerts, or volleyball championships—you can't have a better front-row seat.

Le Soleil is owned by the Cebu-based Lhuillier group of companies (the hotel's president is Jean Henri Lhuillier). The Lhuilliers have built a 46-room hotel that understands the budget of the bigger visitor market. And they understand their visitors' need for comfort and convenience, which basically means immaculate bed linen, fresh towels, good food, and communication facilities that will enable you to call home or office or abroad.

For businessmen, it has a new function room for small meetings and banquet functions. And there's a business center (actually the hotel's business office itself) where a secretary can help you send an e-mail or get you an antihistamine pill when you feel you're coming out in a rash after indulging in the irresistible king crabs—just tolerably spicy but explosively laden with aligue—at the French-Med restaurant Rendezvous.

But dinner at Le Soleil is best enjoyed al fresco on evenings, when like practically every eatery along the beachwalk they trot out choices of skewered meats for barbecues or buffet fares in chafing dishes. The hotel's specialties are steaks, grilled seafood, and the popular crepes (which kicked off a craze in Boracay). But vive le difference. The menu, as with the accommodations, has the Gallic flair of the Lhuilliers' lineage combined with touches of their aristocratic Cebuano heritage. This makes for a hotel and restaurant that, as J.H. Lhuillier says in his welcoming letter to our media group that visited Boracay in mid-March, will color "your dream vacation of sun, sea, sand and wind."

The hotel also runs an apartment with seven units, near the talipapa and a five-minute walk away from the beach, which is popular with families and groups that prefer to do their own cooking—or take a sensual bath together (among friends, of course) in one of

INNOCENTS in a culture of pleasure pursuit

REALITY F7

The garden is planted to tuba-tuba, grandmother's tongue, periwinkle, hibiscus, cordyline, bird's nest fern, fan leaf palm and Roystonia royal palm trees, Indian neem trees, among others. In the course of labeling these plants, the partners discovered that historically the variety of plants in the Philippines before the Spaniards came was limited. Many plants came from South America, mainly Brazil and Mexico, and Florida.

As the owners told these stories in the gazebo, behind them Claudette Bradley played Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata." She intrigued Ester and me when we learned that Paradise Garden and its beachfront restaurant, La Capanninna, were the only places where one can hear the classics and standards live.

Bradley, 41, an American of Maltese and Irish extraction, debuted as a concert pianist with the Miami Symphony Orchestra when she was 10. Although she studied piano at the Florida Atlantic University and was an exchange student at the Royal College of Music in London, she thought she wouldn't make it to the top 1 percent because of her short hand span.

She went to the Naval Academy in Virginia where she joined the Marine Corps Band, playing for two US presidents, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. Later, she went back to school to study electronics, moved to the West Coast, worked for a company that needed someone with a musical background in developing the sound parts of a computer. She became a computer engineer and network administrator, putting in 10 hours at the office.

"I got out in time, or else I'd have taken that roller coaster ride when the economy took a downturn," she said. "Many information technology experts were laid off. They had to sell their Benzes and BMWs and take the bus, move back in with their parents, or work as security guards at department stores."

Bradley discovered Boracay in the course of her work in a cargo air carrier. "They gave me a flight to Tokyo where I stayed two days, then I was sent to Manila," she said. "Once there I was told, 'We have nothing for you, so I had six weeks to wait for the next flight. I found a taxi that brought me to a travel agency. There I saw a poster of Boracay, that famous one with the palm tree leaning on the beach with the white sand. I said, 'I wanna go there.'"

Eventually, she decided to leave her coat in foggy San Francisco and bring over thousands of piano books and her CD collection of classical and world music. "You don't need much clothes here," she said.

Being an Everglades girl, Bradley easily took to the sunshine and blue skies. "My movie is the sunset," she said. "There is more balance now. I can support myself. I'm happier. That's what matters. You can only have it all if your heart and soul have the happiness. And I enjoy interpreting the masters of the last century. Nobody's come closer to them."

One evening, she played our requests (Debussy's "Arabesque" and "Reverie" for me and Franck's "Ave Maria" for Ester). We enjoyed our calamansi gelato and had a glass of red wine sent to her.

Another expat who fell in love with Boracay and decided to stay and live out her fantasies is Julia Lervik. She threw away her return ticket to Europe. Together with partner Otik Makavinta, she put up Balinghai Resort on a cliffside two coves away from the White Beach. (Balinghai is not a mockery of the "South Pacific" song "Bali Hai"; it means cassava, which used to grow profusely in the area.)

For our sunset dinner on the beach, papaya leaves were laid along a table and red hibiscus blossoms served as contrast to the green background. About a dozen holes were hollowed out in the sand, and lighted, tapered candles installed. Outstanding were the aubergine chips and the mango salsa.

Serving our drinks was Heracleo Alto, wearing loose pants (or was it a sarong?) and big puka shells around his neck, his wrists and ankles tinkling with more accessories. Although we agreed that he looked like a native hunk of burning love, he is originally from Makati, is married too, and answers to the nickname Bangaw.

But if there was anyone I would have wanted to bring home to my mother, it was Angelito "Dodong" Guevarra, the cook from the restaurant Caribo who prepared a bacchanalian lunch on Bunyagan Beach.

His boss Edgar Mercado had taught him all about Caribbean cooking, including what were served: cinnamon rice, a seafood skewer of blue marlin, prawns, assorted bell peppers, tomatoes and onions, prawns grilled in butter and anatto oil and sprinkled with pistachio, spicy jerk chicken, and banana Oreo.

The dessert is nothing more than your ordinary lacatan layered with Irish cream, coconut milk, pound-to-bits Oreo cookies and pistachio nuts, but it is the ultimate decadence.

ground forces of the national police.

It's all very assuring, of course, but there's the nagging question: How does the flagrant pleasure-seeking environment of Boracay affect the life and values of its youth, who are exposed to it day after day? This, I suppose, is as much a significant issue as safe water.

In the mornings and afternoons young students in their uniforms walk home along the beach and see the sun-worshippers in various stages of dishabille and dissipation, seemingly with no worries about where the next meal or drink is coming from. How does this la vida loca affect them?

Profound questions. Paradise, or what we wish reality should be—the underpinning of Boracay—is never that simple, especially as it exists only in the mind. But while it lasts, go there. Just be careful: Don't despoil nature, culture, or youth. Simply enjoy yourself.

New destination

NARRA Town is the latest destination of Palawan Nature Experience (or PAX), the tour package launched this year by The Legend Hotel.

The PAX Narra Excursion takes participants to the 943-hectare Rasa Island, home of the endangered Philippine cockatoo and 87 other bird species; Arena Island, where giant sea turtles can be viewed; Crystal Paradise Resort; and Estrella Falls, considered the cleanest inland body of water in Palawan.

Other PAX tours include visits to the Underground River, Honda Bay, and Nagtabon Beach.

For inquiries, call the hotel's Manila office at 639-9256 and 58 or log on to www.experiencepalawan.com.ph.

Vacation package

WATERFRONT Insular Hotel Davao is offering special room rates for its vacation package this summer.

The rates start at P1,000 a day, covering single or twin accommodation, use of the pool, gym and jacuzzi, and roundtrip airport transfer. An addition of P299 will cover buffet breakfast at the hotel's Café Uno.

The vacation package is available until May 31. For reservations, call the hotel's Manila office (27 Fwyndsum Corporate Plaza, Emerald Avenue, Pasig City) at 687-0888.

Safari adventure

THE ZOOMIC Safari, the latest attraction at the Subic Bay Free Port, is scheduled for public opening in the second quarter of the year.

A spin-off of Tagaytay Residence Inn and Safari de Oro Bukidnon, it will feature a tiger safari, petting zoo, serpentarium, picnic ravine, and farmhouses.

Sponsors, partners, investors and donors are welcome to be part of this wildlife project. For details, visit www.residenceinnresorts.com or call 899-9824 or 899-9595 local 349.

One question you probably have in mind: Is it safe to travel to Boracay? We don't know. But is it safe to travel anywhere else these days?

Le Soleil resident manager Peejay Reyes III says Boracay experienced a not too perceptible drop in arrivals after the Bali and Davao bombings.

And the government has taken significant steps to resolve the island's problems of clean drinking water and reliable sewerage system. Reyes explains that the Philippine Tourism Authority undertook the construction of a big-scale water and sewerage system in 1998 after the much-ballyhooed hospitalization of a foreign visitor said to be downed by e-coli infection after swimming in Boracay waters.

To correct the resulting damaging image after the incident was reported in newspapers and travel publications, and to proclaim to one and all that Boracay waters were safe, Philippine dailies showed pictures of then President Fidel Ramos swimming in the waters sans his unlighted cigar and then Tourism Secretary Mina Gabor emerging from the sea wearing, uh, an outfit that she otherwise would not have been caught dead in.

The water system is now fully operational. The water comes from the mainland through underwater pipes, pumped up from a river and undergoing filtering systems at source and again at the southern part of Manuk-manuk island before being distributed in Boracay. The sewerage system, now in its final stages of testing before Boracay connects to it, has a filtering system in Balabag.

The provincial government is also building a road, a 10-km stretch from Manuk-manuk to Balabag that will also service Yapak. I don't know how this road construction will be of any significance to the beach hedonists, but it will mean a lot to the residents of Boracay, many of whom are dependent on the service requirements of the pleasure and tourist business for their livelihood.

Security in Boracay, especially after the Davao bombing, is assured by a whole Army platoon posted on both ends of the island as well as by maritime and

Kai at Greenbelt 2

Japanese resto's Nobu-like offerings and 'Sex and the City's' shocking exit

MUST-go-to restaurant—Kai. Our society is made up of finicky and spoiled individuals who claim to have seen and tasted it all. Just think how many restaurants we have in the metropolis.

So for Kai to enjoy the patronage of the Filipino's discriminating taste and to pack it in every night, there must be something in it that is a notch above the rest.

As you enter its Zen-like interiors (creatively done by Anna Sy), you know that your dining experience will be more than satisfying. The core cuisine is Japanese yet it goes beyond that, offering fares that are up to par with international standards.

The chefs have worked in the famous Nobu restaurant in New York. Must-try's are the wasabi oyster tempura, pan-seared sea bass, with shiitake truffle, Ishiyaki beef cooked in flat stone, and Angus beef fried rice.

Wash them down with either hot tea or watermelon sake. For dessert, try the tofu cheesecake; it is divine!

If you think you know everything about Japanese food, Kai's cuisine will expand your palate and knowledge even more. For reservations, call 757-2509.

Must-have shoes—Carbon. Isn't it great that our retail scene is getting more exciting and up to par with our Asian neighbors? There was a time when you really could not buy anything here. In the last three years, with the advent of creative geniuses from Wink, Tyler, Souk, etc., people looking for affordable hip, up-to-date fashion gear have been having a wild time lapping up whatever the new shops come out with.

Not far behind is Carbon, which has made an impression with its bags. Not to rest on its success, it has added great shoes for men and ladies to its line. The quality, craftsmanship and design are in tune with what you see in your favorite fashion magazines and at a price that won't make your wallet cry.

Carbon is located at Greenbelt.

Must-have accessory—Chandelier earrings. I first saw a stylish Filipina lady based in Paris wearing one of these; I really thought it was beautiful. Not only was it stylish but unique. Judging from fashion magazines, these earrings seem one of the major statements of the year. They can be real or faux, but are a standout.

Must-have furniture—Philippe Starck's baroque furniture. Nostalgia has not only affected Hollywood and fashion; it has influenced furniture design as well. During the Milan furniture fair, one design that stood out from the rest was Philippe Starck's Mademoiselle chair designed for the Kartell. What is it? It is a corset-curved polyurethane body and seat wrapped in colorful silk jacquard atop slightly splayed transparent polycarbonate legs.

Too technical? Well in my terms, it's a chair with transparent legs with baroque style fabric. It is for everyone who loves fine furniture and anything that Mr. Starck creates.

'Sex and the City' shocker. Everyone knows by now that this is the last season of "Sex and the City." So everyone is waiting with bated breath what the last 20 episodes will turn out. Here are some of the storylines that are being developed. (Warning: If you don't want to know, don't read further).

Workaholic, single mother Miranda (Cynthia Nixon) will fall in love with the father of her son; Waspy and prudish Charlotte (Kristin Davis) will marry a gym-crazy Orthodox Jew; Sexy and outspoken Samantha (Kim Cattrall) is diagnosed with cancer, and neurotic Carrie (Sarah Jessica Parker) settles down with notorious playboy Mr. Big and moves to Paris to be with him.

The last episodes have not been finalized but Samantha's story line, according to sources, will become the biggest shock and eye-opener. It's worth watching, if the creative people behind the show can resolve the issue in true "Sex and the City" style—with humor and panache.

Simple test to help parents decide for kids

BABY Magazine's Marita Villafuerte has a simple test to help parents decide what is best for their children.

In Child Psychology 101, the columnist asks parents a series of questions that involve situations many kids have to deal with.

Villafuerte says normal adults will likely find the situations unbearable. She wonders why, if adults cannot tolerate those situations, they let their kids deal with them or stay in environments where they exist.

The entrepreneur turned educator suggests looking at things from the point-of-view of the child to better understand them and care for them. She also recommends ways to help make the child's environment more attuned to his needs.

Columnist Teresa Gustilo-Villafuerte talks about middle children "who have to define their place in the family."

Also in the current issue, Marivi Dizon writes about protecting the whole family's skin from the sun, Cynthia Santos Ocampo-Padilla writes about premature babies, Rome Kanapi talks about how to cure common aches and pains during pregnancy with a simple touch, while educator Nina Lim-Yuson gives tips on traveling with kids.

Caregiver columnist Dr. Pangilinan-Simpao stresses the need to supervise yaya.

Baby Magazine is available at all SM Baby Company sections and Baby & Co. outlets in Rockwell and The Podium, National Book Store, magazine stands like Bufini, kiddie specialty shops like Babyland, Maxibear. Subscriptions are also available at 751-3655 to 56.

Mag waxes nostalgic

METRO Magazine, your guide to intelligent lifestyle, marks a milestone with its nostalgic 14th anniversary issue.

Personalities who had graced its covers in the past—Sen. Loren Legarda, comic icon Dolphy, veejay and model Sara Meier, actress and entrepreneur Joyce Jimenez, superstar Nora Aunor, maverick designer Inno Sotto, super chef Margarita Fores and consummate actress and model Angel Aquino—got together for a once-in-a-lifetime cover shoot.

graphs, traces the magazine's evolution into a lifestyle medium and fondly recalls people who helped shape the magazine.

In the same issue, Metro goes to Boracay for the annual summer swimsuit shoot. Miss Earth 2002 Dzeila Glavovich leads the beach bodies. Beauty stories focus on summer essentials like what to eat for great skin. There is also a special spa indulgence for expectant mothers.

Metro's April issue is available at bookstores and magazine outlets.

Workshops give kids productive summer

ALL SM Supermalls are conducting summer workshops for kids.

The Mad Science Workshop, organized by the Mad Science group, involves experiments like the Bubbling Potion and Slippery Slime to help make learning science both cool and intriguing. The workshops are scheduled April 29 and May 1 at SM City North-Edsa and SM City Pampanga; May 5, 7, 12 and 14 at SM City Fairview and SM City Pampanga; and May 20-22 at SM City Manila and SM Supercenter Sucat. All activities are scheduled from 1-7 p.m.

Singing workshops provide lessons ranging from solo to choir and chorale group arrangements. Dancing workshops will be conducted by the group Whiplash and will include ballroom dancing, April 26-30; and tap dancing April 28. Dance lessons are scheduled at 10:30 a.m.-12 nn, 2:30-4 p.m., and 6-7:30 p.m.

MAD Scientists Palmer and Rizza measure how much air is inside this plastic balloon

Arts and crafts classes include pastel coloring and Crayola on April 29 to be held at all malls except SM City North-Edsa and SM City Pampanga; and drawing, sketching and charcoal painting, also on April 29, 2:30-4 p.m. to be held at all SM Supermalls.

Faber Castell is also hosting a three-day workshop in animation and imagination for both its Faber Castell Little Masters Club members, as well as other interested kids. Workshop schedule is: May 1-3, SM City Manila; May 8-10, SM Megamall; May 15-17, SM Southmall; May 22-24, SM City Fairview; and May 29-31, SM City Pampanga.

location in the world. With its diverse and abundant marine life, it is highly rated by avid divers, novice and expert alike.

Palau is only about 500 miles east of Davao, a 2½-hour plane ride from Manila.

My husband Dennis and I met and fell in love—even spent our honeymoon nine years ago—underwater. We were on the Palau Aggressor, a live-aboard yacht that offered five dives a day for a week. Needless to say, after that, I demanded a real honeymoon just for hugging and kissing.

Since then, we have returned a number of times with a diving core group composed of my aunt, Mary de Leon Rufino; her son, Jon-jon; and his stepsister, Kris Mijares. For our diving expedition this year, we spent a week on board the Ocean Hunter, a small yacht that sleeps six divers and three crew members.

For the past three trips, our sixth diver has varied. First was Gigi Santos, President Arroyo's scuba instructor and matchmaker to Dennis and me. Next was the late Paco Ortigas, who supplied us fresh sushi on board, thanks to his fishing skills.

This year, our sixth member was Jojo Eduque Castro, who is so cool in part because she sports two turtle tattoos despite being in her early 50s.

Ce-boom delegation

On board Continental Air Micronesia, we noticed a large delegation from Cebu headed by the city's Mayor Tommy Osmeña and his perky wife, Margot. Also with them was Tommy's sister, Minnie Osmeña, who was on my best-dressed list at Ruffa and Yilmaz's wedding.

The Cebu delegation was going to Palau for the first time, not to dive, but on the invitation of Palau Gov. Johnny Gibbons. Later that evening, we joined them for a dinner hosted by Palau President Tommy Remengesau at the Palau Pacific Resort. The PPR's claim to fame is its being where John F. Kennedy Jr. and Darryl Hannah of "Splash" fame spent a romantic vacation in the early '90s. So there is some kind of social life there to write about!

There are only 18,000 Palauans, and since most of the islanders either leave or work in fishing or tourism-related businesses, there is a shortage of professional workers. And since Pinoys are resourceful and hard-working, we now have 8,000 OFWs there.

Our chef on board, Arlee Terunez, was Filipino. He was so organized that he could bring aboard a week's supply of food and feed us so much that even the vegetarians in the group gained weight (thanks also to our daily dose of vanilla ice cream with chocolate syrup).

Survival test

If you can survive a week on open water (a Bonamine pill at the start should do the trick) living on board a 64-foot yacht where you shower in the open and have to make do with a compact toilet (showering while sitting on the toilet is actually possible, ouch!), then this diving adventure is for you. Here's a sample log entry from our trip:

Day 3: At our first dive for the day at Ngedebus Corner, there were huge barracudas sitting patiently while getting groomed by cleaner wrasse, ignoring a buffet assortment of butterfly fish, parrot fish, trigger fish and soldier fish.

Suddenly, Jon-jon pointed to dolphins near the surface. Our yacht's captain, Kenneth Johnny, had been "herding" them to us as the dolphins playfully jumped the waves in front of the boat's bow. We got more dolphin action after surfacing when about eight to 10 of them swam with us to the next dive site, Peleliu Express.

Peleliu, lying near the southern tip of the barrier reef, has a sheltered cove where we stayed in between dives. It was a fortunate break for Jean Nadao, our group's physical therapist (who also dived for the first time in between barfing) and Tess Roquette, our masseuse (isn't it heavenly—a massage after all the dives?). Both depleted our Bonamine supply ISLANDS IN THE SUN. There's always time to connect with the universe in nature.

PALAU isn't only about diving. There are breathtaking vistas between the rip-roaring currents.

before they felt well enough to do line fishing.

An interesting side note, Peleliu was the site of one of the bloodiest battles fought in the Pacific during World War II. On the island are several war wrecks like old tanks and Japanese bunkers. But even more interesting is that marijuana plants were introduced there 20 years ago and, in spite of efforts to stop the cultivation, they still thrive there. So much for the flora and fauna of Palau.

During our midday dives, the strong currents brought turtles, big groupers (known to us as lapu-lapu) and gray reef sharks—major hunting action. Swimming against the current was quite challenging but a good experience.

Before Arlee's Mediterranean dinner, we did a night dive at Orange Beach seeing interesting night creatures such as tiger cowrie (so tempting but illegal to take home), yellow sea hares, albino leaf fish and sleeping parrot fish. On the gorgonians and other soft coral, we found sponge crabs, Lambis shells and colorful nudibranchs (these invertebrates are hermaphrodites—they have both male and female sex organs and choose their sex when they meet another member of their species. Now isn't that clever!).

After the meal, Kris and I teamed up for an intense game of Scrabble (is "qadi" really acceptable?).

Day 7: Almost dived out but still enjoying since we were on Nitrox tanks, our pre-breakfast dive was in Ulong Channel. Though mornings are not my favorite time of the day, this site is one of the best locations. Upon entry, we spotted a mama giant, thorny stingray resting on the sandy bottom. Our dive master, Troy Ngiraike-lau (funny guy with "TROY" tattooed on his back in case we forgot his name), said she might be protecting her newborn.

Drifting through the Ulong Channel was like watching that aquarium station on television. The channel was so panoramic with a wall of lettuce coral, giant clams (so big the Sea Princess would probably fit in one) and color-changing octopuses.

On the next dive in Shark City, both my Tita Mary and I touched a leopard shark as it was ascending after its sleep was interrupted by Dennis' video taking. The dive ended with a fleeting glimpse of a small eagle ray rapidly flying away.

Tita Mary thought she was finning fast enough to keep up with the eagle ray but it turned out that Troy was actually dragging her along!

Blue Corner is the best dive site in Palau. It is a wall dive where schools of gray reef sharks move up close and personal while hunting schools of skipjacks. Swirling barracudas, dogtooth tuna and giant trevally join in the action. The Palauans invented the reef hook for this dive. Hook on at 33 feet and you can stay for over an hour watching the pelagic hunters.

If the hunting action gets boring, a large, resident Napoleon wrasse (fondly called Nap) will hang around begging for sausages. My Tita Jojo Castro tried feeding Nap but didn't let go of the food fast enough so she was terrified when Nap briefly sucked in her hand. Good thing Nap does not eat Pinoys.

Before ascending, two huge eagle rays tried to get friendly with us but Jon came closest, thanks to his super long fins. With the multitude of marine life and the camaraderie on the Ocean Hunter, I really thank God for being able to experience His wonderful, colorful world.

RP-made souvenir

Since the flights to Manila are only twice a week, we spent two more days at the PPR and shopped for souvenir items (though most are "made in the PI," as the OFWs say). We also spent a day at Dolphin Adventure, where the founder of Sony set up a facility enabling people, including the handicapped, to interact with the dolphins.

We also went to Jellyfish Lake in the Rock Islands. The lake is inhabited by thousands of jellyfish which, having been locked in the lake for centuries, have lost their ability to sting. I was just happy to use the silicone-like animals as reference in deciding what boob size would look great. The jellyfish ranged from pebble-sized to Dolly Parton specials.

On our last day, Navot and Tova Bornovski of Fish 'N Fins (operators of the Ocean Hunter) came by to do sunset photos with floral head crowns, which are typical of Palau. We have become friends through the years and have them over for dinner when they are in Manila. They come quite often to shop and for medical or dental services.

If you want to feel better about the progress in the Philippines, go visit Palau.

Flying back home, I glanced at the Philippine waters and noticed several barrier reefs and sandy beaches. I am sure those would be exceptional dive spots for liveaboards to visit. Think of the additional foreign exchange they would bring plus the jobs they would generate. Unfortunately, security and political instability pose tourism problems, don't they?

Well, I say, never lose hope. We just need to market ourselves better to the world! Maybe we should ask Mayor Tommy Osmena what he learned in Palau!

Thames International Business School delivers its promise: Studying abroad made reachable for Filipinos

"Filipinos can afford studying abroad. I didn't think it was possible at first, but here I am now." This was the remark made by Jojan Juson, one of Thames International Business School's (Thames) students completing her degree in the UK. Jojan is taking up Business and Information Technology in the University of Portsmouth (UK) and will be part of only a handful of Filipinos to finish college abroad...at least for now.

A few years ago, a high quality college degree from a reputable university abroad was close to unreachable. This was mainly due to the high cost of tuition and the cost of living overseas; only those who had the resources were able to go.

Well, not anymore. Thames, with its innovative system and globally recognized curriculum effectively cut the cost of a foreign degree in half.

Below is a partial list of Thames students currently studying abroad:

Students take the first two years locally, and finish the final 1-2 years in any of the affiliate universities in the UK, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, or the US. This year, the Thames community eagerly awaits the next batch of graduates from the UK.

With the innovative system of Thames, students are taught "how to think" and not "what to think".

Thames, with its innovative system and globally recognized curriculum effectively cut the cost of a foreign degree in half.

Students are bound to know not only the theories but also the application of the concepts learned in class.

To prepare the students for a challenging life abroad, they are groomed to better adjust in a different country. They go through leadership seminars and are subjected to high-impact values-formation activities that develop strength of character. A challenging atmosphere and a culture of excellence is also promoted within campus walls; from the professors, to the classrooms, to the lessons taught. "We prepare the students to become challenge oriented," explains Thames' Director, Mr. Joel Santos. "Only when they are prepared mentally and emotionally will they be able to excel overseas."

More than a school, Thames has effectively become a community, a microcosm of the world that the students and teachers move in. Once in the UK, the earlier batches help the newer students adjust to life abroad.

Earlier this year, a new batch of students from Thames left the country to pursue their dreams of earning a foreign degree. "We are extremely proud of the performance of our students in the UK. We have received word from our affiliates that they are doing very well, and are performing admirably," says Thames' President, Vivienne Tan. She is confident that the future batches will be able to excel as their earlier counterparts too. "It is a dream come true not only for the students, but for us educators as well, to see them go abroad. Because we feel that for every fulfilled dream is a fulfilled promise from us to provide a better way of earning quality education overseas," Tan ended.

For more information about Thames and possible scholarship opportunities, interested students and parents can visit the Thames Eastwood Campus, or call 687-4736 to 37.

HERRERA-TEE TEN

Wedding is captured in black and white

Text and photos by Mandy Navasero

BLACK-AND-WHITE photographs, whether vintage or modern, are very dramatic.

Not surprisingly, interior designer Gigi Q. Tee Ten opted to have her wedding photographs in black and white.

Ten, a graduate of the Mandy Navasero Summer 2000 Photo Workshop, married recently longtime beau Robbie H. Herrera at the St. James the Great Parish in Alabang. In her Rhett Eala bridal gown, the bride looked, well, picture perfect.

Officiating priest was Father Chito Bernardo. Among the principal sponsors were Mariano Herbosa, Dr. Miguel Celdran, Steve Honiveros, Pedro Yap, Ambassador Rora Tolentino (represented by Marlene Mondofiedo), Victoria Maniquis, Zenaida Tantoco and Elisa Chong.

The bride is the daughter of the late Crispin and Benita Tee Ten while the groom is the on-

BRIDESMAIDS Carla Balatbat, Patty Echauz, Tin-Tin Blabagno and Susan Bartolome

Philip S. Cruz while maid of honor was Marichel P. Belangol.

THE COUPLE with the groom's parents Francisco and Chit Valencia

THE GROOM'S AIM buddies: Stevie Martinez, Rommel Dionisio, Paye San Gabriel and Rey Laguada

A ROMANTIC young man sent bouquets of lovely roses every week to the woman he wanted to be his wife.

The floral offering won her love and the romance ended in an elegant but simple evening wedding at the Santuario de San Antonio in Forbes Park recently.

The courtship actually started at the halls of the Asian Institute of Management in Makati City, where the two were both studying three years ago.

The ardent suitor, Martin B. Valencia, only son of Francisco and Teresita (Balatbat) Valencia Jr., anonymously sent a dozen roses every Thursday to the object of his affection.

The former Cyril Belangel, daughter of Benjamin and Anita (Palomar) Belangel, did not know who the mysterious sender was until she agreed to accompany Martin on a shopping errand for his mother in Alabang. On impulse, he bought roses and presented it to her while they were inside a store.

The formal proposal, that followed soon after, took place over dessert at the Manila Peninsula.

The solemn rites at the Santuario were officiated by Monsignor Gerardo Santos and Fr. Cesar de Santos. The bride's gown by Paching Valera de la Fuente was white satin gazer topped by bias inverted Bertha collar accented with cabbage roses and buds. The bodice was covered with imported silver and transparent beads. She had a long beaded train, and on her head was fine tulle.

Flower arrangements at the church and the Rigodon Ballroom of the Peninsula Hotel, were the dinner-reception was held, carried the peach color motif, complementing the pink and orange decor. They were executed by Tony Padilla. Centerpieces were roses in palest pink, green berries, orchids and lilies and orange candles in virina glasses.

Church music was provided by Bernie Pasamba, while the Brown Sugar band played dance music after the reception.

Principal sponsors were Cornelio Gison, Lydia Echauz, Oscar Reyes, Arsenia Bauao, Fernando Balatbat, Olive Ang, Nards Leviste, Wilhelmina Peluso, Ramon Balatbat, Elenita Cabrera, Mario Aguas, Teresita Lucido and Antonio Panajon. Best man was

Philip S. Cruz while maid of honor was Marichel P. Belangol.

Groomsmen were Mark Leviste, Paolo Balatbat, John Echauz, Antonio Chong; bridesmaids were Patricia Echauz, Barbara Carla Balatbat, Florence Lobaton, and Christine R. Blabagno; candle sponsors were Benjamin Belangel Jr. and Abigail Parazo; veil sponsors were Raymond Lacedao and Susan Bartolome; and cord sponsors were Stefano Martinez and Sophia Echauz. Bible bearer was Joseph Conrad.

RAMOS-LEYNES

Rico Ramos, son of former Quezon City councilor Teodoro and Trinidad Ramos, will marry Maiah Angela Leynes, daughter of former Infanta, Quezon, municipal councilor

Ruben and Minda Leynes, on May 4 at the Manila Cathedral. Reception will follow at the Coconut Palace, Cultural Center of the Philippines Complex, Manila.

The bride will wear a glossy white silk gazar and Swiss tulle off-shouldered princess-cut gown, with tulle draping neckline embellished with heavy, embossed beads and a detachable cathedral train. The gown was designed and executed by Eddie Baddeo, who also created the ensembles of the entourage in sunset orange motif. Patrick Hermosa of L&P Talon is the makeup artist, while the wedding coordinator is the Magical Events.

private sector were back last week at the Jesses' home to listen to German cellist Klaus Kanngiesser and our own virtuoso pianist, Raul Sunico.

Imagine the audience's delighted surprise when it learned that the valuable cello was lent by former Marcos cabinet member Ronnie Velasco, who modestly sat in the crowd and appeared embarrassed by the attention. It isn't every day that one finds government officials truly interested in culture.

The sterling renditions of Mendelssohn, Brahms and Schumann were duly appreciated by the audience that is now eagerly looking forward to—would you believe?—next month's Hausmusikabend event as promised by the generous German ambassador and his wife.

The exciting, expensive art of imaging

By Constantino C. Tejero

A SPARKLING Display. Search for Clarity. Treasures to Hold. Mining Secrets of the Trade. Unveiling the Diamond.

With those words, Eastman Kodak Company announces its 75th anniversary in the country.

For the diamond anniversary, it held a trade show at SM Megatrade Hall recently, meant for a showcase of imaging products as well as for consumer promotions. It was billed with the advertising slogan "Capturing the Brilliance of Life."

Installed in a semicircle in the hall were booths for the company's six business units: Consumer Imaging, Digital and Applied Imaging, Health Imaging, Entertainment Imaging, Commercial Imaging, and Kodak Professional.

"We pride ourselves in the fact that we are a total-solution provider, from image capture to output, from camera, film, scanner, to printer," says Diana Pilapil-Mendoza, product and channel manager of Kodak Professional in the Philippines.

No competitor

This division has two segments, commercial and portrait, and it includes advertising, fashion, art photography. It has cameras with costs ranging from P360,000-P800,000.

"A professional camera that I can say is of good quality would start at about $4,000," says Steve Seah, Eastman Kodak-Singapore digital systems manager, Professional Division, Southeast Asia Cluster.

He shows off the newest toy from his company: the model DCS Pro 14n, with a promo price of P360,000.

"This is the hottest camera on earth right now," says Seah. "It has no competitor yet."

This one, according to its promotion bill, delivers the highest resolution images in the digital SLR market today (13.89 million total pixels). It features a full 35-mm sensor (24 mm x 36 mm) with medium-format quality and enlargement capability. It transfers images 3-4 times faster than the current Firewire connectivity. And it features a professionally enhanced, magnesium-alloy body.

"We provide the widest array of products," says Mendoza.

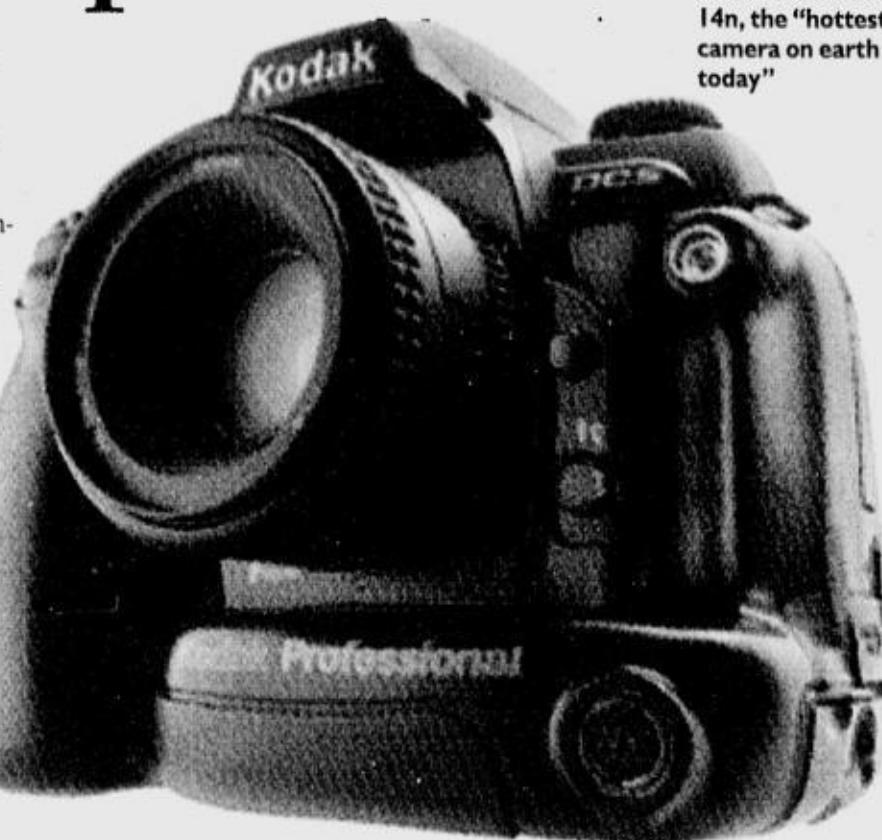

While other companies sell only cameras or film, Kodak provides even the photographic paper, the latest of which is the color metallic paper, launched last year. Unlike with matte or glossy paper, here the image seems to pop out of the surface.

"Parang may 3D effect," enthuses Mendoza.

She shows a digital wedding storybook using the paper. It is an 11" x 14" album with 20 leaves and 40 pictures, costing P75,000 from Jorge Maniquis' studio-lab.

Teach and train

"Our key clients are professional photographers, laboratories and studios," says Mendoza. "We teach them, train them, tell them these are the trends—to elevate their skills and knowledge. We teach them the concept. We provide them quality products. We help them create demand."

KODAK DCS Pro 14n, the "hottest camera on earth today"

Kodak on its 75th year can claim to be a total-solution provider, from image capture to output, from camera, film or scanner to printer

The first Kodak camera was launched in 1888, priced at $25. Forty years later, the company introduced the first motion-picture film.

That year, 1928, Kodak Phils. started operations in Binondo, Manila. It held its first business office in C.M. Hoskins on Escolta.

Today it has so imbedded itself in the consciousness of Filipinos that we have even coined a word reflecting that legacy: kodakan.

New men's magazine debuts

MANUAL, a new magazine for men from Mega Magazines & Publications, Inc. (MMPI), has just hit the newsstands.

In the first issue, Tan and Gania's "Homme Improvement" looks at fashion and the straight male with the help of eight of the country's top menswear designers. Anthony Nocom, Rhett Eala, Gerry Katigbak, Vittorio, Edwin Tan, Kenneth Chua, Randy Ortiz and Marden Iglesia create designs that herald the return of the gentleman.

Men's fashion, after the baggy shirts and billowing pants, returns to the slimmer silhouettes and genre-inspired designs.

Shani R. Tan observes that menswear today "are revamped classics with a more subtle edge although traditional details feature prominently."

The section "Fitting Room" mixes and matches the old reliable khaki, using clever accessories to broaden its appeal.

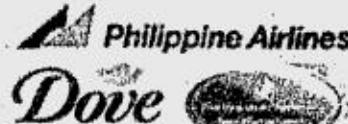

Manual also features Vicente Groyon's perspective article about life inside the Makati Medical Center's psychiatric ward, a breezy profile of Isabel Roces, the country's model of the moment. Quinito Henson tells the gritty story of Freddie Roach, the best young boxing trainer in the world, while Miguel Ongpin writes about the finest obscure bars in Manila.

FESTIVAL queens

It's 'pistahan' time in Metro Manila

THE DEPARTMENT of Tourism (DOT), Cultural Center of the Philippines (CCP), the cities of Manila and Pasay, and Star City will mount the first pageant of Filipino festivities May 1-3.

The three-day "Aliwan Fiesta," intended to rival the colorful carnivals of Brazil and the legendary mardi gras of New Orleans, will open with a parade that will start at the Quirino Grandstand at Luneta and end at the Aliwan Theater at Star City.

It will bring together at least 3,500 talents from the country's 16 regions.

Manila Mayor Lito Atienza, Tourism Undersecretary Rolando G. Reyes (representing Secretary Richard Gordon), Pasay City Mayor Pee wee Trinidad, and CCP chair Baltazar Endriga attended the launch.

Aliwan Fiesta will give a glimpse of some of the country's best known fiestas like the Sandugo Festival of Bohol, Panagbenga Flower Festival of Baguio City, Ati-Atihan of Kalibo, Aklan, the Sinulog of Cebu, and Kaamulan of Bukidnon.

Regions will compete in three categories: Cultural Dance Parade Competition, Float Competition, and Reyna ng Aliwan pageant. Members of the board of judges will stay in three places—Quirino Grandstand, the Rajah Sulayman Plaza in Malate, and in front of the Aliw Theater at Star City.

The whole parade route will be adorned with the colorful kiping from Lubcán, Pahiyas. Multicolor costumes bedecked in rice, corn, fruits a la Isabela's Bambanti Festival and many more will be featured.

Other participating festivals include Mananayaw ng Makati, Pamulinawen (Ilocos Norte), Pavburulan (Cagayan Valley), Sinukwan (Pampanga), Pasing-gatan (Palawan), Sumakah (Rizal), Kaugma (Camarines Sur), Sarakiki-Hadang (Calbayog City), Tribu Sinandulog (Tangub City, Misamis Occidental), Halad (Coratato), Kadawayan (Davao), Tinalak (South Cotabato), Buyawanong Placer (Surigao del Norte), Pakiligan sa ARMM (Parang, Maguindanao), and Sining Pakalagayan (Maguindanao).

With almost P3 million at stake, the event could be the tourism highlight of the year. It is planned to eventually expand the event into an Asean pageant that will showcase the diverse arts, culture and tradition of Southeast Asia.

The festival will also feature bazaars selling native products and culinary delights of the 16 participating regions, as well as a grand fireworks display.

A three-night concert will feature the country's top performers and show bands.

A prelude to the annual Flores de Mayo aka Santacruzan, the event follows the declaration by the World Tourism Organization (WTO), the international association of 140 government tourism agencies, that 2003 is "Visit Philippines" year.

Supporting the event are giant companies like San Miguel Beer Corporation, Zest-O Corporation, Touch Mobile, Nestle Philippines, Sara Lee Corporation, Wyeth Consumer Health Care and Palmolive Shampoo.

Barrio fiesta and birthdays

By Donnie C. Ramirez
Contributor

SENATORIAL wife and former movie queen Helen Gamboa Sotto rolled out the red carpet for her Jordanian friend Raja Almuneef who, together with her daughter Reem Alrasheed and traveling companion Suzan Alares, was a recent Manila visitor.

Helen organized a lavish barrio fiesta at the family's garden in White Plains to show appreciation for the hospitality extended by Almuneef to the Sottos when they visited Jordan last month.

The garden was ablaze with lights, lanterns and colorful bunting. A splendid array of Filipino dishes was laid out on a festively decorated buffet tables. For entertainment, the acclaimed Ramon Obusan Folkloric Group performed a suite of Philippine regional dances like the rhythmic Maglalatik, the elegant Subli, the playful Pilapitik and the pulsating Palu-Palo, a martial dance that features skillful hand movements. The group ended its performance with the popular Tinikling.

In return, Reem Alrasheed did a traditional Jordanian dance. She also joined the local dancers in the Tinikling, getting appreciative applause as she deftly and graciously kept her feet from getting caught between the bamboo poles.

Tito and Helen and their hand-some brood—Lala, Apple, Ciara and Gian—wore traditional Filipino costumes.

'Choosing the Right School for a Better Future Part II'

College in a Nutshell

By: Ma. Lourdes Rochelle P. Gutierrez

SEEMS only yesterday, I was one of those seniors struggling in the midst of smelly crowds at PLM in search of the registrar's office. ... I was there standing in infinitely long queues waiting for the release of my test permit. I was wondering if this University will welcome me...hoping. Wishing.

Lo and Behold, I just found myself sitting in one of the classrooms at PLM, listening to "kind" professors and before I knew it, I could already crown myself a true-blue "kolehiyal". Everything was so "changed" in college. My schedule was far behind the schedule I had in high school. I was so overwhelmed to come to class at 11 a.m. At last, I said to myself, I can stay in bed almost as close as forever. I only had 3 subjects a day and call it "full load" ultimately; there was a taste of sweet freedom in college. I could actually go to SM Manila whenever I want to, but I had also to think of the paper I have to pass next week. I can always absent myself to class without bothering to write an excuse letter but I had to cope up with the lessons and make good on my quizzes. I could choose to sleep in class, but then I must remember that it is a disrespect to the teacher and to myself as well. I am allowed to come to class in civilian clothes but then I know, that because I commute in order to get to school, I must dress properly. Freedom is only one side of the coin. Responsibility is always with it.

One thing sure enjoyable in this chapter of one's life is the joy of meeting people from all walks of life, seeing the "world" and the feeling of being at the prime of one's life. College students have all the opportunity to learn both from experiences and academic lessons. They have the wellness of Physical strength and the vibrant force their young lives gave them as a gift.

As for me, I had the feeling that I had actually met the world when I learned to come to school alone. At first, it was really scary to ride in the jeep alone but eventually, I also got used to it. And that includes sitting beside sleeping men and women who will deliberately squeeze their butts to sit. As well as dealing with classmates who open gas cocks in the chemistry lab and laugh at everybody who smelled the fart-like stench. Meeting the world also includes adjusting to new professors. All sorts of them are found in the universities and PLM is no exception. It houses from the most naive to the most, "I know it all" professors. It's true about what they say that most often, your grade depends on the professor you have. I had to watch out not to offend them in any way because I am never sure who my professor is. He may call it shot by giving me a grade of five. Ouch. And for professors, giving away "singkos" is not some big deal. Sadly, it means depression and loss of hope to the student. Let's cut the Melancholic part. There are better and more interesting stuff about college. All my sisters on the house help with these: "Boys!"

Yup. The male species is really one of the reasons for a girl like me to be excited about college. I remember seeing this caption on a bottled pin: "Yes, if not for the boys, I'd quit school." Speaks some truth. And I am not an ultra-unromantic bore. I had my share of romantic moments. They may not really be romantic but they are actual acts of a gentleman. Girls easily fall for guys that give them priority, make them feel special and respect them. So I do conclude that I am yet to find the gentleman for me. As the saying goes: "to each, his own"! It's been roughly 11 months since these experiences. Time really flies I'm already a college sophomore before it even got to my senses that I was already a college freshman. Time can never be turned back. All we have with us are the memories we keep in our hearts. And my first year in college is one of those. With this, I close the curtains. "Carpe Diem!"

APC scholarships: putting quality education well within reach

IT'S A PUBLIC perception that to get quality education nowadays, you have to match the fees that entail good academic training. This prevents a lot of our high school graduates to pursue higher studies. Yet, financial difficulties should not prevent anybody aiming to take up a bachelor's degree. That prompted Asia Pacific College (APC), an educational partnership of SM (Shoemart) Foundation and IBM Philippines to offer various academic scholarships and financial assistance programs. With the aid of APC, qualified and deserving students are provided with assistance to pursue their IT degree without worrying too much about the matriculation costs.

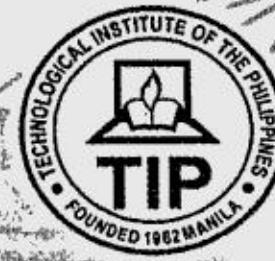

"APC, through the support of SM Foundation, is capable of offering generous academic scholarships and financial assistance programs for our Filipino graduates. At present, we are not limiting the slots, as long as they meet the necessary requirements, they can avail themselves of the programs," said APC president Dr. Paulino Y. Tan.

The programs are differentiated to meet different needs. With varied choices to choose from, potential scholars can easily identify the suitable program that fits them, based on their capacities as well as limitations. APC's academic scholarships are designed to reward graduates who achieved academic excellence while its financial assistance programs are for those who are deeply affected by today's challenging socio-economic conditions.

APC's academic scholarships are categorized into four groups namely: Entrance Academic Scholarship, Dean's Scholarship, SM Foundation Scholarship and the Army Special Forces Special Educational Foundation Scholarship.

All these opportunities are still open to students who will decide on an APC education. For more information, visit the Admissions Office at G/F, No. 3 Humabon Place, Makati City. Call 852-9670 to 71, or e-mail admissions@apc.edu.ph. You may also check their website at www.apc.edu.ph.

Plus one

Petite Charmaine Cruz may look delicate, but behind the Dresden doll-like features and unassuming ways is a smart and dynamic woman who runs her own advertising agency aptly called Provocateur. Charmaine graduated from the Ateneo de Manila University with a degree in Interdisciplinary Studies. She is at present completing her Masters in Industrial Organizational Psychology at the same school.

At Provocateur, Charmaine does not only render traditional advertising services to clients; she also conducts training workshops on organizational development, as well as qualitative and quantitative research.

Charmaine celebrated her birthday recently with an intimate cocktail reception at the Makati Shangri-La Hotel's French restaurant Cheval Blanc. Aside from corporate friends like Citibank's Eric Alberto, Megaworld's Noli Hernandez, Credit Suisse's Jessie Tan and Carolle Ong, Development Bank of the Philippines' Gerry Arellano and Empower Consulting's Roj Cruz, Charmaine's well-wishers also included senatorial sons Paco Magsaysay and Mark Villar, sportswriter Bill Velasco, former Ilocos Sur Governor Luis "Chavit" Singson, Evangeline Alberto of the Movie and Television Review and Classification Board, businessman Ernie Liwanag, Alay Lakad president Frank Evaristo and society host Johnny Litton, who offered a rousing toast for the pretty birthday girl.

Inner meaning of events, writing for healing

THE SIGNIFICANCE of current world events, especially to Filipinos, will be discussed at the Open Evening series of the Center for Health and Creative Arts (Chacra) 6-8 p.m., April 28.

Inner perspectives on current events like the United States-led war against Iraq, SARS and other remarkable natural and man-made occurrences will be presented at "The Inner Meaning of Current World Events."

Guest speakers are Georgina Solina and Cecile Gutierrez.

Also to be held at Chacra is a workshop on "Writing for Healing" 2-5 p.m., April 28-29 and May 2.

Benilda Santos and D.M. Reyes will conduct the three sessions to explore principles of healing the self through writing.

Chacra is located at 59 C. Salvador St., Loyola Heights, QC. Call 434-5381.

'Healing' weekend for couples

RETROUVILLE, a program for couples desiring to improve communication, reestablish trust and forgiveness, is being offered for the first time in Pampanga through the Family Life Commission of the Diocese of San Fernando.

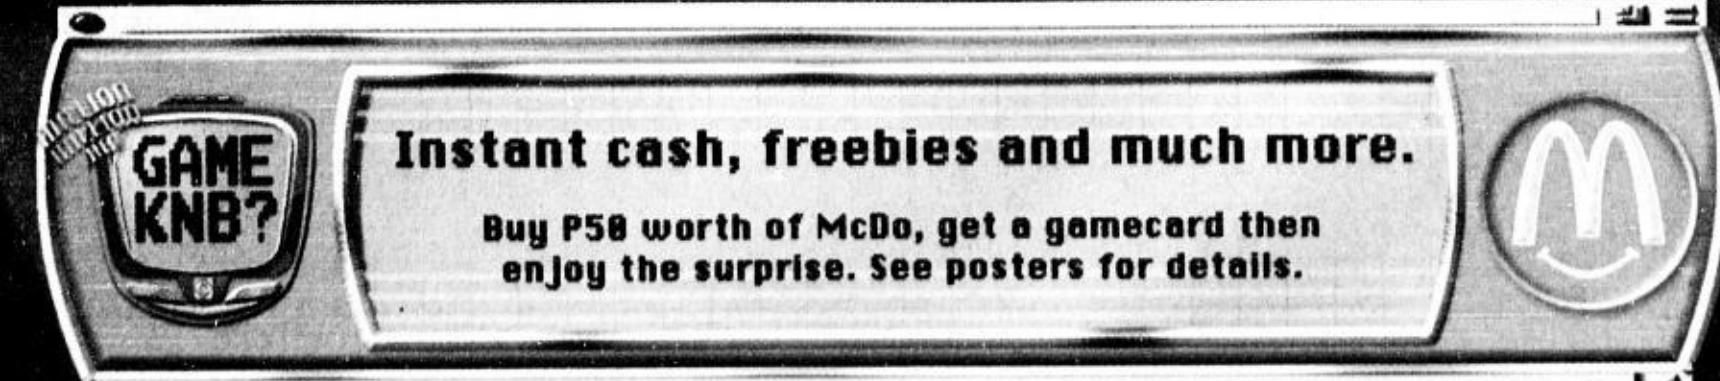

A weekend is scheduled on May 2-4 at the Our Father's Home, 54 McArthur Highway, San Fernando, Pampanga.

Retrouville (pronounced retro-vye) is French for "rediscovery." Couples, who think their relationships are in trouble, will probably find the help they need in the weekend session.

Pampanga residents can call Jun and Edna at (045) 963-7827 and 877-7224, or Fred and Son at (045) 877-0376; in Manila, Fr. Dave Clay at 523-3361, CF at (0918) 902-0511, or Ike and Flor at 718-0689. Inquiries will be kept confidential.

Buy P50 worth of McDo, get a gamecard then enjoy the surprise. See posters for details.

Women can succeed at work through personality development

By Girlie I. Basilio

AS A WOMAN, have you wondered what you can really achieve in life? Are you missing out on good opportunities simply because you lack the right tools or are down on your luck? Have you felt that life is passing you by and fortune always seems to smile on someone else?

If your answer is yes to these questions, it is time to assess what you can do to change your life's directions. One way is through developing your personality. Through personality development, you can gain self-confidence and muster enough resolve to turn your life around.

In an interview with People at Work, Dina Loomis, personality development guru and president of South East Asia Speakers and Trainers Bureau, shares her insights on how personality development can help women succeed at work.

PaW: You are a much-sought after speaker on personality development. How did you get started in this field?

Loomis: First, I was invited to conduct a one-hour educational talk in Sydney, Australia in May 1988 for the Toastmasters International Overseas Convention. I was then district governor of Toastmasters International in the Philippines. It just happened at that time I was reading about personality development and so I picked that topic for the talk. I found it to be a very exciting field. I started reading more books about it and eventually, I was able to make a training program and a book entitled "How to develop a winning personality."

PaW: How can a woman be beautiful inside and out?

Loomis: Most people just look at outer beauty but in reality, one cannot be beautiful without inner beauty. Let's take a look at outer beauty first. A woman who really wants to look good has to take excellent care of her skin, have a diet and of course, exercise.

PaW: At work, is beauty in a woman a handicap or an asset?

Loomis: If a woman is too pretty, people think that she's there because of her good looks. But it can also be an asset if the woman's job takes her to center stage and she is required to represent the company in functions, conventions or sell and market their company's products. Beauty certainly becomes a winning edge.

PaW: When a woman is applying for a job, is beauty a consideration?

Loomis: On first impression, appearance counts for 55 percent, behavior and the way a person carries herself, 38 percent and words only 7 percent. But as you get to know the person, you become aware of her other assets and attributes.

PaW: How can a woman improve her visibility at work?

Loomis: A woman needs to develop a purpose for living. She needs to have a zest for life, because she knows that she has achievements in her chosen field. Then, she becomes beautiful, because she exudes an aura of self-assurance and fulfillment. This is longer lasting. This is inner beauty. A working woman also needs to develop her own style. She cannot blindly copy whatever current fashion dictates. She needs to know what kind of figure she has, her ambitions in life, and what kind of clothing and color is flattering to her. In short, she must remember, before buying any clothing, if she looks good in it, she can buy it. If not, just look.

PaW: Some women are what you would call "Plain Jane." What three things should they do to change their appearance?

Loomis: First, she has to take good care of her facial skin. If she has skin that is smooth and glows with vibrancy, she will look more attractive than women with good features but who have skin blemishes. A strict adherence to proper cleansing and skin nourishment are essential for maintenance of healthy looking skin. She also cannot expose her skin to too much sunlight. Using moisturizers and sun-screen lotion will do the trick.

Second, a working woman without any makeup on will look like a walking ghost. Certainly, putting on a little color will make a big difference. Application of the right foundation, eye shadow, blusher and lipstick will make any plain Jane start looking like an attractive professional. The matte look is out and the shimmer is in. This gives women the fresh dewy look. Third, wearing accessories that complement their style will complete the picture. An example would be for a working woman wearing a solid navy blue suit. She has two choices: she can complement her outfit with pearl earrings and necklace, or she can wear an attractive colored scarf with matching earrings. She simply must remember that she cannot wear too many accessories. The rule is "less is best."

PaW: What's your last advice for a working woman to develop her personality?

Loomis: She needs to develop a love for reading. When a woman can carry on a lively conversation on practically any topic, she becomes a very interesting individual. People will begin looking at her with respect. She will be treated with dignity. Membership in a local Toastmasters club can change her life. She gains a lot of self-confidence and can hold her own in any situation.

PaW: How can people get in touch with you in case they want some advice?

Loomis: Please check our website at www.prospeakers.biz or email me at seaweb@surfshop.net.ph. You may also call us at 883-1681/2676/3085.

Confused...

your existing relationships. You may find it at an early age or later in life. There is also a chance that you may never find it at all.

As you go through school or your first jobs and get exposed to various types of work, you get to have a feel for things you like to do and things you definitely don't like to do. This gut feel will lead you to those areas that can spark your excitement at work. Therefore, follow your gut feel.

Discovery time

However, there may be times when, after trying out a lot of different jobs, you don't find even one thing that can fire your enthusiasm, like our confused employee. In this case, you just have to continue searching for the kind of work that will make you come alive. On the other hand, try to see if perhaps the reason you don't get interested enough in any one thing is you don't devote enough time to a particular type of work. If you hop from one job to another, you may not be able to uncover the joys of a particular job that come out of an in-depth knowledge of the work. Sometimes, jobs grow on you and one day, you'll discover a certain satisfaction in your work.

It is a good sign that young people nowadays are looking for a handle on their careers and lives. The reader at age 24 still has a lot of time to ponder on his destiny. It is always best to analyze your career interests early than get paralyzed later on in a dead end job.

Young exec takes on multiple HR roles

By Rochelle Leonor

AT 31, he is one of the youngest in Maybank Philippines, Inc. In fact, he is considered the 'baby' of the group. But this doesn't mean that he has it easy.

Arnold Francis Justiniano has been the head of the bank's human resources division since July 2001. He says the work is not without its challenges. Justiniano explains that his work is focused on three functions—personnel management, employee relations and services, and manpower and organization development. Personnel management mainly deals with recruitment, payroll processing and employee information services. Meanwhile, employee relations and services cover employee welfare and benefits. Manpower and organization development centers on training and job evaluation. "I'm in charge of different facets of HR," he says.

To fulfill these roles is challenging enough, according to Justiniano, saying that HR no longer holds the misconception of being about 'hiring and firing' only. Justiniano offers that HR is more than that. He says HR acts as the administration expert, employee champion, change agent and strategic partner. And the heart of HR is all about attracting, retaining and motivating.

Company fit

When asked what does he look for people who want to be part of Maybank, he graciously answers that he looks for those who fit the culture of the company. "Their individual vision must be aligned with our vision." Justiniano adds that to retain and motivate people, the right systems should be in place. Although rewards and performance management systems are in place, it's not just about money. "At the end of the day, employees should get something from us, whether in terms of monetary, training, etc.," he says.

Maybank Philippines, Inc. is a commercial bank owned by

HR Focus

Maybank Group

Maybank Group, the largest bank in Malaysia. It used to be Republic Planters Bank before it was acquired by PNB Republic. Justiniano explains that the bank's culture is still evolving. "Since we are an acquired bank, we're still in the process of establishing the culture."

Justiniano readily debunks the notion that HR is a field for women. A graduate of AB Management, major in Human Resource Management from the De La Salle University-College of St. Benilde, he had many male classmates taking the same course. He adds that it all boils down the continuous evolution of the field. "Many companies have male HR practitioners." Justiniano says his brother, who is part of the HR team of United Laboratories, Inc., also inspired him.

Track record

Justiniano's climb in the corporate ladder was not an easy task. After graduating from college, he joined SGV & Co. as an HR consultant. He stayed with SGV for three years before transferring to Philippine Telegraph and Telephone Corp. (PT&T). He stayed there for five years before moving to Maybank.

He says that his previous jobs developed his skills in HR. His stint with SGV & Co. instilled in him the values of discipline and hard work. Being in a consulting firm, he had to hasten his training. The theoretical concepts he learned from school were put into good use in SG&V. From PT&T, he learned technical concepts such as taxation, revenues, etc. These, he claims, molded him to be an effective HR practitioner. "One shouldn't just concentrate on what HR is," he says. "One should also know the business and talk the language."

JUSTINIANO

HR, as a whole." He credits his team for being efficient, cooperative and effective. He says whatever his contribution to Maybank may be he owes it to his people. "It is not my work alone."

Overtime...

Some even believed that OT is only for those who don't know how to properly manage their time at work (9 percent). Conversely, 26 percent of the respondents replied that they would go on OT to finish the tons of work that couldn't be done during regular working hours. However, one respondent comments, "Overtime work is not a matter of choice, but of the need to be of service. One can even be required to work for reasons authorized by law." A small number of employees (11 percent) admitted that OT did help them earn extra money.

If reflective of the general population, the results of this survey suggest that half of the workforce render OT only occasionally. For a third of employees however, OT appears to be a way of life. Not surprisingly, given a choice, Filipinos do not want to work beyond normal working hours. They would rather spend the extra hours with friends, family or on personal pursuits. These sentiments are valid because studies show that people should be wary about going on overtime more often than they should. Research reveals that increased OT may impair both concentration and mood of workers. These may result in errors and poor work quality. Frequent and prolonged OT work is also related to feelings of depression, fatigue and burnout.

OT limits

How can organizations avoid the risks associated with too much OT? They can start by heeding these guidelines:

• If the workload (physical, perceptual and/or mental) is at a level where people have difficulty sustaining performance over eight hours, avoid extending the workday to 10 to 12 hours.

• Prolonged and continuous overtime is not recommended. If the overtime period exceeds three months, productivity may fall even further.

• In production or service areas where volunteers are solicited for overtime work, it is usually preferable to rotate the extra work among several people.

• If continuous or long periods of overtime are required, alternative shift systems or additional employees should be explored.

• When possible, schedule OT so employees can anticipate prolonged hours and adjust accordingly.

• Develop time management skills among employees to enable them to cope with their workload.

• Harness technology to either make processes more efficient or allow more flexibility in work location and hours.

• Create a culture that will discourage excessive overtime.

This may even mean implementing policies preventing work or meetings beyond work hours.

OT in itself isn't bad. It only becomes harmful when carried to the extreme. It's important to remember that our bodies and spirits have limits. The key is finding the balance between rest and work. After all, we work to live, not live to work.

Overtime work is boon, burden to people at work

By Regina M. Hechanova and Jenice Jocson-Cruz
Ateneo Center for Organization
Research and Development
(CORD)

OVERTIME a.k.a. OT is sometimes called "overtawad." For people at work, it is a fact of life, boon and burden at the same time.

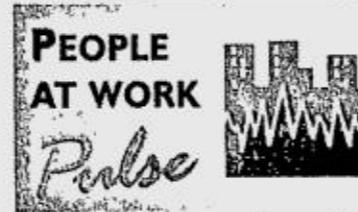

According to Article 83 of the Philippine Labor Code, "The normal working hours of an employee shall not exceed eight hours a day." Article 87 of the same Code says, "Work may be performed beyond eight hours provided that the employee is paid for the overtime work, an additional compensation equivalent to his regular wage, plus at least 25 percent thereof." The law is clear on compensation that employees must receive for overtime work. However, there are no limits on overtime hours.

Due to stiffer competition, many Philippine companies resort to overtime to get the most out of their employees. On the other hand, many employees dare not complain for fear that they may lose the opportunity to earn extra compensation through legitimate overtime work, or worse, lose their jobs.

ANATOMY OF OT

How much overtime work do people do? Why do people do OT? Do companies encourage OT? Given a choice, would you do overtime? These were the questions we posed in last month's People at Work Pulse. A hundred and fourteen responded to our poll, majority (68 percent) of whom were female. Most respondents belonged to corporations (75 percent); 12 percent came from the government, and 13 percent from the academe, NGOs and hospitals.

The results of the survey show that of the total number of respondents, 50 percent go on overtime only as the need arises. Nineteen percent render overtime once or twice a week and a third (31 percent) go on overtime everyday. These results are revealing, in view of their claim that they devote most working hours doing productive work. Majority of the respondents (54 percent) reported that most of the day (six to seven hours) is really spent on working while the rest (44 percent) claimed that all eight hours are exhausted doing work-related activities.

Interestingly, OT appears to be more of a norm for private organizations. Most employees (72 percent) in the government, academe and NGOs said they render OT only when the need arises. In contrast, 55 percent of employees in private corporations render OT at least once or twice a week.

A number of respondents said that their companies encourage overtime work only when it is necessary (48 percent). A smaller number (12 percent) said that OT was discouraged to save on operational costs. In contrast, some employees said that overtime was practically a norm in their workplace (22 percent). Other respondents (21 percent) reported that you would not get promoted in their company if you were not willing to do overtime work.

AN EMPLOYEE is bound by the clock

If asked to render overtime work, 46 percent of the respondents refused and would rather save the extra time for themselves or their family.

Inspiring presence

By Bishop Precioso D. Cantillas, SDB, DD

their mission to spread His teachings to all peoples.

AS PART of my pastoral work among the faithful of Maasin, Southern Leyte, I join them in processions, such as those during fiestas and Holy Week. Before, I had thought that my presence would be insignificant among the usually large crowd of participants, but hearing some say, "Oh...the bishop was with us in the procession!" I realized that, after all, my presence as their spiritual leader somehow gave them extraordinary assurance that what they were doing was right.

The disciples of Jesus likewise rejoiced when they saw the risen Lord who came and stood in their midst and said to them, "Peace be with you....He showed them his hands and his side. The disciples rejoiced when they saw the Lord.

On the evening of that first day of the week...Jesus came and stood in their midst and said to them, "Peace be with you....He showed them his hands and his side. The disciples rejoiced when they saw the Lord.

What would Jesus do?

By Teresa R. Tunay

IT'S but natural for us human beings to be skeptical. Like the disciples: they were already told of Jesus' rising, yet they hid in fear. Jesus had to walk through the wall as it were and to show them His wounds before they believed.

Too often, we think that to see is to believe. That's okay, that's but human. A workplace becomes a heaven or a hell, depending on whether or not people there "see" Jesus. But how may Jesus be "seen" in the workplace? Must Jesus always be the employer who "saves" and "delivers" us and our families from want? How about the ordinary employee? Can he have a chance to "save" or "deliver" anyone?

All of us "gentile or Jew, woman or man" are called to be co-saviors and co-deliverers of Jesus—by being faithful witnesses to the Risen Lord. Our coworkers need not wait for miracles and spectacles, or to poke their hands into Jesus' wounds first, if we ourselves become the living proofs of His triumph over sin and death. We can aspire to be "little Jesuses" eight hours a day to our co-workers, trying our best to be beyond reproach in even our smallest dealings—in short, to imitate Him.

It's not as scary as it sounds—we need not be flogged and crowned with thorns or be nailed to a tree in order to reflect Jesus in our places of work—He already shed all the blood that could be shed to prove the point of resurrection. But we can look to Jesus to inspire us, and especially when compelled to make decisions, to first ask ourselves: "What would Jesus do if He were in my place now?"

(Email the author at avemaria@csi.com.ph)

ous workplace issues close to your hearts, when shared, can contribute to transforming our places into more human-friendly places to work in.

This "pulse" check will be conducted once a month. The results of this poll will be published the following month. To quicken your response rates, Philippine Daily Inquirer and Ateneo CORD will be giving gift packages to two respondents to be drawn from those who replied for the month.

Confused employee wants to find passion at work

By Regina Galang Reyes

GOING back to the continuing saga of finding passion in life, here's another feedback on this topic from a reader who calls himself Confused Employee: "I have been reading your columns in the People at Work Section. I was particularly interested on your series on finding passion at work. I could say that's my dilemma for some years now. I have been jumping from one job to another since I graduated in 1998, mostly with foreign-assisted projects. I have worked with NGOs, consultancy firms and now I'm connected with a government agency. I knew I wanted to write but I just can't find the right field to go into—environmental advocacy, child's rights advocacy or indigenous peoples.

"To ease my confusion, I just took sociology for my master's degree until I can really find the field to specialize in. I would really appreciate it if you could send me a copy of the Circles of Passion. It might help me since I really want to specialize at this point in my life. I'm already 24 years old and I still can't chart my career because I'm still confused which path to go. Thanks in advance."

YOU can tell that actress, model and television host Angel Aquino is a serious reader from the condition of her books. The spines are creased, the pages well-thumbed. Favorite volumes are dog-eared and bristling with bright yellow Post-It flags. Crack one open and you find passages underlined and highlighted, with little notes and even drawings on the margins. Clearly, the book and its owner have a history together.

"I interact with the books," she says. "It was just a few years ago that I started reading. At first I was scared to touch the pages. I would keep them clean, pristine. I would put little dog ears tags. And then I got more and more into the reading that I started drawing on the pages. Now I own the books that I read."

"There's one Pablo Neruda book that I have. One of the poems is about a woman's body, and how she adores it. He was describing a woman's body, and I drew beside it the way I remembered my body when I looked in the mirror."

It's good to be Angel Aquino these days. Apart from co-hosting the weekly women's magazine show "E," she has been doing a lot of modeling assignments. She is also working on a new movie with Sharon Cuneta and Hilda Koronel called "Crying Lady." Written and directed by Mark Meily for Unitel Films, the offbeat plot revolves around the lives of professional mourners played by the three leads.

"E" is a lot of fun, but the most challenging thing for me is acting," says Aquino. "I never believed I could really act, so I'm always testing myself. I always try to see if I can deliver that role."

Perhaps the most fulfilling role for Aquino is being mother to Iana, 9 and Thea, 7. "I try to get them into reading, especially my older daughter, who likes to write. I think she got it from when she was younger, and I'd read books to her. She especially liked 'The Giving Tree' by Shel Silverstein. It really made an impact on her. There was one moment when I was feeling sad, and she gave me a note and it was in the shape of a tree. It said: 'You don't have to cut yourself for us.' It really made me cry."

Sunday Inquirer Magazine: So you were a late bloomer with books?
Angel Aquino: I never liked reading. I only read if it was an assignment or if I had to do a book review. Then I'd enjoy the book that I had to read, especially "The Little Prince" in high school. It became an instant favorite and I learned a lot from it. After that I didn't read for a long time. It was only after college that I started reading again. I met a friend who was passionate about reading,

Before the Stillness of Flowers (after two photographs in a Davao daily, April 4, 2003)

casual in sleeveless shirt, denims, & rubber sandals, she, holding back amazement & the noise behind her, not ruffled by new & strong emotion piercing her but looking longingly down on him, her arm stretched out to touch his hair as though to confirm his attendance shiftless now but changed before her full of surrender to a beckoning point beyond pushed into focus by the white of his unsubduable eyes—

except that his has just been pushed back to show his naked chest and young face still full of arrival at sunset into Davao skies from open seas

& far Kuwait, as though, stunned & unsteadily walking straight into air from the brief earth he forgot everything he wanted to tell her,

running up her steeply arched back to allow her to touch him just with her lips & all the words taken away from her just now.

about love stories and novels. So I started with love stories and I got engrossed.

SIM: You're not really a heavy reader?

AA: I don't read a lot of books, although I have a lot of books at home, and I try to read every night. I'm not the type who has to finish a book before getting on with another. I'm the type who has piles of books, unfinished: I just go back to them when I'm in the mood for a particular kind of book or story.

SIM: Prose or poetry?

AA: I love poetry more. When things in my life are benign and nothing much is happening, I read novels. That means I have the patience for a novel. But when things are a little erratic, when I feel sad or when I feel most happy, then I read poetry. Because those feelings are transient, and you try to feed them, or help yourself get rid of them. Feed your happiness, or let yourself forget your sadness, or sometimes even dwell in your sadness. So you read sad poetry and you think, "I'm not the only one feeling this way."

SIM: So poetry is a mood-enhancing drug? It's your Prozac?

AA: Tama. Even when I was younger, I liked poetry more. Just a few lines and you get a whole story. I liked how they played with words. It's enticing, poetry.

SIM: So you're more into feelings than intellectual content?

AA: I'm a "heart" person, so poetry appeals to me more. This (picking up Ramon Sunoco's "Bruise: A Two-Tongue Job") is my favorite poetry book. The first time I encountered this was in Quezon. I was already out of college, and I was working with a couple of students, acting for their thesis. One of them lent me this book, and I couldn't let it go. I put it in my bag, and I only told her when I got back to Manila that I had it, and that I promised to look for another copy so I could return it to her. I liked it so much that I gave it out as presents to my friends. I also like Aida Santos, Pablo Neruda, of course, and Rainer Maria Rilke.

SIM: If you were to be stranded on a desert island, and you could only take one book, what would it be?

AA: I think it would have to be "Conversations With God" by Neale Donald Walsch. It's fiction, but I really learned a lot from it. The book and my beliefs just fit together when I read it. It became my bible. Some people think it's blasphemous, but it's about the kind of God that I know of, and would like to think of as being. So if I were to be stranded, it would be this book, just to be reminded that life is good and things are happening for a purpose—that's why you're on that desert island.

SIM: Top ten?

AA: "Conversations With God." I'm a big fan of Jeanette Winterson. I love "The Passion" and "Written On The Body." "Bruise: A Two-Tongue Job" by Ramon Sunoco and "Stories from the City" by Issy Orlina Reyes. I also like all of Pablo Neruda's poetry books. Rod McKuen. When I was in college, that was the kind of poetry I liked, 'yung mushy-mushy. The "Shopaholic" series. Because I have kids, I also have a lot of children's books. I have most of Shel Silverstein's books. And of course, "The Little Prince." I read it again when somebody gave me a copy for my kids. I haven't outgrown it.

SIM: If you wanted someone to understand where you're at right now, what book would you give them?

AA: I think I would be in an adventure like "The Little Prince." I'm still searching, getting to know the different ways of different people, and trying to understand and accept.

Love Notes

By Joe D' Mango

A Test of Commitment

I wanted to test his love for me again. And so I asked my friend to text him, and flirt with him

Dear Joe,

Call me Fall. I am 25 and had my first boyfriend way back in 1994. Our relationship lasted for about three years. We were very happy—until Mark came into my life. He was my ex-boyfriend's friend. I began to fall for him even when I was still with my boyfriend. But when I found out that my boyfriend had another woman, I broke up with him. It was during that time of devastation that Mark came to me and helped me get on my feet again. I gave Mark a chance and it was the happiest moment of my life. I love him a lot and I know that he loved me, too.

Joe, I am a Christian. I value virginity and I also value my parents' advice to live in purity. Mark and I had a promise that we would never go beyond the proper limits. Mark respected me and my decision. I know he has his needs but most of the time we fight because of my jealousy. You see Joe, I'm very selosa.

Two weeks before our third year anniversary, he told me that we needed time to think. I asked him why and he told me that he was sick and tired of my outbursts. We agreed that our separation would only be temporary. We just had to think how we could make things work for both of us.

But one day after that I found out from his officemate that he had a relationship with a married woman. Joe, I felt my world crash around me. I didn't know what to do. I confronted him and he told me everything. He broke up with me because he suspected that the woman was pregnant. In a way, I admired my boyfriend because he knew what his responsibility was.

He came back, asking for another chance.

He told me he loved me so much and that he was just tempted. I gave him another chance. We then shared wonderful days. A couple of months after, the most horrible thing happened. I broke my promise to myself and to my parents.

That was a year ago, and we are now four and half years into this relationship. I am thankful we still have each other. We are even planning to get married this year.

Joe, there was one thing that entered my mind. I wanted to test his love for me again. And so I asked my friend to text him, and flirt with him. My friend told him that she had a crush on him. My boyfriend told me that there was somebody who was texting him. He gave me the number of the girl without his knowing that we set him up. I felt happy because he told me about it. But when my friend asked him if he was committed or not, he told her he was not. He gave her his number at home and he asked my friend to call him so that they could talk more and know each other well. I was very surprised when I read his messages. I told my boyfriend the truth about the test. He then told me that the girl was just trying to ruin our relationship. But Joe, I know that he was lying again.

Joe, I finally decided to give him a break-up letter. I told him that I was very hurt when he betrayed and denied me. I don't know if he truly loves me. Joe, I don't know if I did the right thing. Now, I want to find happiness on my own.

Yours truly,
Fall

FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS

Fiction:

"Crossroads of Twilight"
By Robert Jordan
Tor Fantasy

The Wheel of Time continues to turn. This massive tome is the 10th volume in Jordan's wildly successful fantasy series. And it's easy to see why. With its sweeping scope and full-page action, "Crossroads" seems like a fantasy movie on steroids—or whatever they take over there. Egwene, Perrin, Mat, Elayne and Rand all return in this rousing sword-and-sorcery epic, worth your time even if you haven't caught any of the previous books. After all, don't you want to know if they will all succeed against the encroaching power of the Dark One? Fair warning: If you read this book, you might have to pick up the next one. And the one after that. Ruel S. De Vera

"Stone Kiss"
By Faye Kellerman
Warner Books

New York never looked quite as vile as it does here in Faye Kellerman's "Stone Kiss." A veteran of the crime novel, Kellerman keeps the reader hooked despite the rather distasteful surroundings as Lt. Peter Decker is called in to help find the truth behind the murder of a relative. It is an uneasy homecoming for Decker and our protagonist will soon discover there really is more to the murder than it first seems. What he finds out will threaten much more than his life or that of his loved ones. A breezy if disturbing read, "Stone Kiss" will keep you up though it won't change your life. RSDV

"The Janson Directive"
By Robert Ludlum
St. Martin's Press

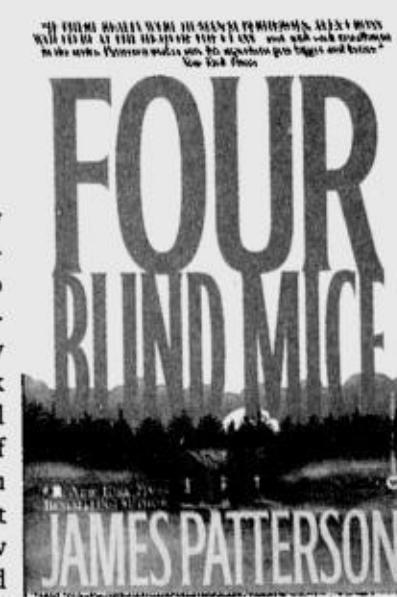

One of the last books written by the late spymaster Robert Ludlum, "The Janson Directive," now available in paperback, is vintage Ludlum. What begins as the kidnapping of a moneyed philanthropist turns ugly and soon extreme measures are needed. Then things get really bad.

Slick covert operative Paul Janson gets compromised in a conspiracy within the classified underbelly of America's spy network. Pursued by a determined and very capable agent named Jessica, Janson unleashes his own plot to uncover his enemies and survive. Janson, of course, is prototypical as far as Ludlum heroes go. Like Bourne, he's practically indestructible. Or is he? A well-crafted and diverting novel of smart guys with big guns, "The Janson Directive" shows us exactly why Ludlum is very much missed by loyal readers. RSDV

"Four Blind Mice"
By James Patterson
Warner Books

Right off, you know whodunit, three Vietnam veterans who murder without scruples and ruthlessly frame innocent folk for the crime. It will take every ounce of self-control for you not to flip to the last chapter to see how these "three blind mice" get their come-uppance, but when the revelations come...well, you smell a rat. Pennie Azarcon-Dela Cruz

"Portrait in Death"
By Nora Roberts, writing as J.D. Robb
Berkley Books

As to why successful authors use pen names to differentiate their work, we don't have a clue. Truth is, it seems Nora Roberts' work as J.D. Robb seems much edgier and exciting than her own steamy romances. Maybe she needs the change of pace. She also needs a change in title, as "Portrait in Death" is her 16th novel with "in Death" in the title. Quibbling aside, this is a meat-and-potatoes detective novel, with Lt. Eve Dallas, fetching and smart as ever, on the trail of a perfectionist serial killer (aren't they all?). Competent and mildly diverting though not overly creative, "Portrait in Death" should be welcomed by Roberts fans and fans of the potboiler genre alike. RSDV

"A Thousand Country Roads"
By Robert James Waller
Warner Books

The book that this fluffy read follows, the phenomenally successful "The Bridges of Madison County," was an awful work saved by a romantic premise of a story and a much better movie, thanks to the actors drafted to play photographer Robert Kincaid (Clint Eastwood) and housewife Francesca Johnson (Meryl Streep). Waller's prose remains masturbating in this sequel that recounts what happened after the affair, how Kincaid and Johnson kept longing for that "one dancing moment when the old traveler saw the fires of home, when the trains came to rest and their whistles turned silent." (Eeeeww.) Kincaid goes on his last adventure, and discovers that he impregnated a pretty young cellist some time before Francesca. Now Kincaid's son Carlisle is looking for his father. Waller opens by explaining why he just had to give in to the "hundreds and letters, maybe thousands" asking for a sequel, and ends with "a moment from my life, my wanderings," where he actually writes himself into a poem with kindred spirit Kincaid. Eeeeww again. I'd wait for the movie. Alya B. Honasan

"How to Practice: The Way to A Meaningful Life"
By His Holiness the Dalai Lama
Translated and edited by Jeffrey Hopkins, Ph.D
Pocket Books

The Dalai Lama quotes the Buddha himself on how to handle this book: "Like gold, upon being scorched, cut and rubbed/My word is to be adopted by monastics and scholars/Upon analyzing it well..." Unless you're familiar with Eastern spirituality, this book of quiet profundities is not going to be an easy read, definitely not one to stuff in your bag for a lighthearted jaunt to the beach. (Try chewing on lines like "Sufferings are to be recognized, but there is nothing to be recognized" over a barbecue.) It's best taken little by little, allowing some quiet time for the thoughts to find meaning in your own life. To his credit, the Dalai Lama grounds his text by citing examples from his own life and study experience, and by using everyday examples for practice, like meditating on a watch you see, want and eventually purchase. Like many things Buddhist, there's little fire and brimstone here, but tenets like "Never cheat anyone and always remain honest" are as universally ideal as they come. ABH

"Philippines Festive Isles"

"The Philippines: Islands of Enchantment"
Text by Alfred A. Yuson, photographs by George Tapan

It's like gilding the lily: The photographs are luscious enough to fill up the senses, so who needs words? Fortunately, Yuson provides not so much text, but context: What's behind the constant chaos and cultural schizophrenia?

Summer Comfort with MENDREZ

Hitting the beach? Taking a stroll in the mall? Whatever activity you plan this summer, do it in style. This April, Mendrez unleashes its latest summer collection. And what mood accentuates this collection? Summer cool-down!

The scorching summer heat creates this uneasy feeling. The sharp rise in temperature steals the grace out of mall-hoppers, robs the joy out of partygoers, and takes the satisfaction out of vacationers. That is why Mendrez has come up with such simple but trendy footwear fit for any summer activity.

Whether you're taking an easy walk along the sandy seaside, or aimlessly wandering the crowded halls of the hippest malls, or simply enjoying the peace and coziness of your home, Mendrez guarantees comfort and ease through its thongs and flat slip-ons. These stylishly sporty footwear in white, blue and fruity tones such pink, red and mint green, are definite must-haves.

Bags with floral frills and buckles as details are also part of this month's collection. Shoulder bags to match the footwear are perfect accessories to complete the summer ensemble.

So feel fashionably comfortable this summer! Go to any of the 70 Mendrez outlets nationwide.

nia? What are the two kinds of Filipinos? Where's that great leader who can someday lead the country out of its Third World status? The politicized prose provides powerful insights on the blessings and burdens of living in these otherwise enchanting isles. PAC

"Teach Yourself Photography"

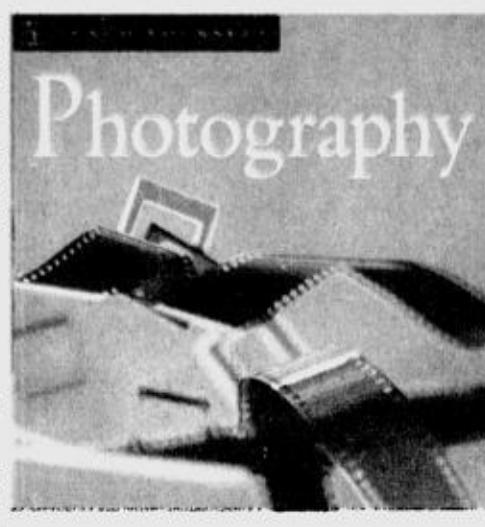

By Lee Frost
Teach Yourself Books
Contemporary Books/McGraw-Hill Company

Contains the basics: how to choose a camera; the advantages and drawbacks of auto-focus, compacts and digital cameras; troubleshooting the most common exposure problems; understanding light and weather; composition, still life and portraiture. Plus advanced techniques on night photography, special effects, capturing high-speed action, developing and printing. The tips are amply illustrated with photographs and drawings and should make even the most self-conscious beginner feel confident enough to aim and shoot. PAC

"Housetraining for Dummies"

By Susan McCullough
Hungry Minds

Relating as I do to the 84 percent of respondents interviewed for this book who call themselves their dog's Mommy or Daddy, this reviewer found this book extremely readable. If you'd like to "teach your dog to eliminate when you want him to and where you want him to—and to refrain from eliminating at any other time and place," this can only help. McCullough is engaging and breezy; the book is generously illustrated, and chapters (including the all-important "Making the Nutrition Connection," what and how to feed your dog) begin with cartoons. Of course, some of the recommended gear won't cut it in the Third World; I still think doggie diapers are absurd. But there are little boxes of great information, like "How long can a dog hold it?" (which comes with the warning not to test your dog's bladder strength) or "The truth about table scraps." There are helpful "links" that point you in the right direction ("Want to deal with a pooh who

"Virgintaran at Iba Pang Akda"

By Mayette Bayaga
University of the Philippines Press

This book consists of simple narratives of women coming of age, or standing at the edge of a building about to take a leap of faith. Well-crafted and expressed in rich and provocative Filipino prose, the stories flesh out the dilemmas, contradictions and social expectations that make a woman's every decision feel like a walk through a minefield. PAC

"A Song for my Brother and Other Stories"

By Antonio A. Hidalgo
Milflore Publishing, Inc.

The award-winning pieces of short fiction in "A Song for my Brother" shows the different faces of Tony Hidalgo's prolific fiction. There is something for everyone in this new collection, yet it is the stories brimming with Hidalgo's inventive humor that stand out. "The Man Who Sold Dreams," "The Short Life of Ompong Bajo" and "the Telenobela life of Migs San Juan" display this quality in varied settings and tone. "A Song for my Brother" is a good chance to experience Hidalgo's wicked capacity for coming out with something different. RSDV

"With Hearts Aflame: A Historical Novel"

By Victor M. Ordoñez
Anvil Publishing

The Philippine-American War through the eyes of a young American soldier torn between loyalty to his country and his love for a Filipina, whose family was deeply involved in the 1896 revolution against Spain and the subsequent resistance against the US's "benevolent assimilation." Without romanticizing the war or taking liberties with historical events, this novel humanizes history and makes it as current and exciting as today's telenovela. PAC

"Testament and Other Stories"

By Katrina Tuvera
Anvil Publishing

Dark family secrets and inevitabilities—a favorite uncle's gay liaison, a young girl's abortion, a dying parent, serial infidelities—told in taut and spare language, like it's raining in some explosive emotion. Not exactly light summer reading, but worth the effort if only to meet some characters too real for comfort whom we conscientiously avoid meeting in real life. PAC

"Eight Stories"

By Alfred A. Yuson
University of the Philippine Press

The prize-winning writer's stories, both old and recent, are gathered in this UP Jubilee Edition for a new audience to enjoy. Yuson's crisp humor diverts, his bold ideas challenge, his mind-bending—or just plain weird—plots delight and titillate. There's a little sex, the flavor of social commentary, particularly in the newest stories. But the strength of Yuson's fiction has always been his irresistible capacity for inducing wonder in any reader of any age and, in stories such as the excellent "The Music Child" and the engrossing "Romance and Faith on Mount Banahaw," readers will see that he is in fine form no matter what he wants to do. RSDV

Non-Fiction:"Bongga Ka 'Day! Pinoy Gay Quotes to Live By"

Compiled by Ronald Baytan, Ralph Semino Galan and J. Neil Garcia
Milflore Publishing Inc.

Here's the baging version of those little Hallmark-style gift books to give to your favorite vakla. The quotes are divided into thematic sections, with irreverent titles like "Huwag po itay!" (on facing up to family and social disapproval) or "Born again" (on the liberation of finally accepting your kabaddingan). The sources are writers living and dead (Rolando Tinio, Tony Perez, Danton Remoto), movies, plays, various interviews, even a dead bold star's suicide note—an inclusion that would otherwise be in bad taste, but hey, they get away with it. Besides, the note was just too grammatically disastrous not to be funny. To be sure, not all the quotes are scintillating, and some are too long for quick recall.

Many are poignant and a lot are brazen ("Pare, and guwapo mo, pare. Gusto mong tsu-in kita, pare?" writes Miguel Castro in "Lucy" from "Ladlad"). A few illustrations would also have worked for a book of this nature. But it's nice to have all those lines together in one fun volume. ABH

"Lucky"

By Alice Sebold
Simon & Schuster, Inc.

"Lucky" is hardly the word to describe the author, who unflinchingly recalls in agonizing detail how she was raped at 18, an impressionable virgin who had dreamt of becoming an Ethel Merman-diva despite her braces, bad complexion and extra weight. Gripping and often excruciating, the memoir reads like a novel as Sebold walks us through her ordeal, takes us to its aftermath, and makes us confront life's puzzling absurdities and cruel ironies. Finding out how she survives the harrowing violence, nails her rapist and retains her buoyant spirit is one more reason to pack this book wherever you're going this summer. PAC

"Live From New York: The Uncensored History of Saturday Night Live As Told By Its Stars, Writers and Guests"

By Tom Shales and James Andrew Miller
Little, Brown and Company

Few viewers on this side of the Pacific saw "Saturday Night Live" during its '70s heyday, but it's safe to say that comedy as we know it now wouldn't exist without the groundbreaking show. The list of comics who cut their teeth on SNL reads like a who's who of contemporary comedy: John Belushi, Chevy Chase, Dan Aykroyd, Tom Hanks, Martin Short, Mike Myers, Chris Rock, Adam Sandler—the list goes on and on. Written as an oral biography, "Live From New York" offers a fascinating behind-the-scenes glimpse of the weekly tightrope act that became a television institution. The authors don't skimp on the sleaze—the sex, drugs and rock'n'roll that made the show what it was. But what excites most about the book is the sense of envelopes being pushed by creative minds at full throttle. Eric S. Caruncho

Philippine Publications:Fiction:*"Ang Aking Prince Charming at Iba Pang Noveleta ng Pag-Ibig"

By Joi Barrios
University of the Philippines Press

Oh to be young again and courting in these paradoxical times, when a woman is expected to be forward, forthright and laid-back about men, but still be married by 30, preferably to a Prince Charming. Oh, the challenges, the word play, per-class Filipina. Doña Concepcion's youth spanned the crucial historic juncture when Spanish colonial rule gave way to revolution and eventual American rule. As governor of Tayabas, Don Manuel Quezon makes a cameo appearance. But important historical events and personages merely form the backdrop and supporting cast for day-to-day life in Tiaong and Sariaya. In the end it is the quotidian details that are most fascinating: dining on pigeon adobo, tapa de javali and pitipig with milk, riding the carromata to town, shopping for pafuelos and white canton cloth to be sewn into camisas de china. ESC

"Kung Baga Sa Bigas: Mga Piling Tula"

By Jose R. Lacaba
University of the Philippines Press

"Kung Baga Sa Bigas" amounts to poet, screenwriter and journalist Jose "Pete" Lacaba's "greatest hits," gathering 60 of his best-known poems. Included are much-anthologized classics of Filipino writing such as "Paksiw Na Ayungin" and "Ang Mga Kagila-gilalas na Pakikipagsapalaran Ni Juan de la Cruz," Martial Law-era works which have lost none of their sting. Also included are songs written for Lacaba's screenplays, such as "Aling Pag-Ibig Pa" (written for "Sister Stella L.") which have become standards in the protest movement. As a bonus, the anthology includes the last poem Lacaba wrote in English. Titled "Prometheus Unbound," it was published under a pseudonym soon after Martial Law was declared. When read downward, the first letters of each line spelled "Marcos Hitler Diktador Tuta." Lacaba never lost his militancy, although he was never as obvious again. Note that the special low-cost UP Jubilee Student Edition of "Kung Baga Sa Bigas" is just the right size for the average socially-aware young person's back pocket, where it rightfully belongs. ESC

"Txt-ing Selves: Cellphones and Philippine Modernity"

By Raul Pertiera, Eduardo F. Ugarte, Alicia Pingol, Joel Hernandez and Nikos Lexis Dacanay
De La Salle University Press

Not exactly light summer reading, but in the world's texting capital, "Txt-ing Selves" serves as an important roadmap through the ongoing geography of change that is occurring in Philippine society. This is a one-stop shop for all those researchers hunting down facts about cellphone usage and effects in the Philippines, and what a shop it is. Readers patient and curious enough to wade through the study will discover just how much life has been changed by the likes of the ubiquitous Nokia 5110. See how digital love can be prepaid and listen to the fascinating testimonials of people who, as subjects of the study, speak of their mobile existence. The authors use substantial and engaging case studies (such as the activist who uses a boycott of SMS to strike a blow for SMS rights) to show us the multifarious effects the cellphone has on everyday life all over the country. It goes well beyond Edsa 2. Think of this as a required "text-book" for Generation Text. RSDV

Shortcut recipes to everyday meals and some fancy dishes. The secret? Lean cuts or choice meats finely ground or cut into bite-size pieces for quicker cooking; stir-frying or grilling; canned soups for sauces, frozen veggies and instant mixes. No pretense to gourmet meals, but the simple easy-to-follow recipes and cooking tips should prove extremely helpful to working moms, OFWs, students and singles living away from home. PAC

"Suddenly Stateside: Funny Essays on Pinoy Life in America"

By Marivi Soliven Blanco
Milflore Publishing

The American Dream can turn out to be a nightmare even for highly qualified professionals. The cultural divide can be a chasm for newcomers, even in such quotidian tasks as passing the driving test, babysitting a pet mouse, surviving winter, sitting through a Pinoy cultural night, resisting the venalities of Vegas and confronting racism. A quick entertaining read that manages to put across some disturbing insights on how Filipinos constantly struggle between becoming mainstream and keeping their ties back home. PAC

Over 9 Million lives continue to rei9n this summer

Holy Week in the Philippines was steaming hot this year especially in the eight designated hotspots where SMART gave their subscribers something to sweat about. The Philippines' leading wireless network celebrated their over 9 million subscribers milestone with their SMART Rei9ns campaign that encouraged vacationers from all over the country to sweat-it-out in a week of non-stop celebrations and promotions in Baguio, Subic, Batangas, Enchanted Kingdom, Puerto Galera, Borneay, Cebu and Davao. Those lucky enough to catch the celebrations were treated to these events in these hotspots.

The pristine white sands of Boracay were invaded by hordes of sun-seekers during Holy Week and they were treated to some uniquely engaging promotions that rewarded SMART subscribers and potential subscribers. The SMART Rei9ns booth offered a whole host of goodies for their visitors including the most affordable prepaid phone kits and discounted SMART Buddy Nokia 3315, SMART Buddy Nokia 2100 and Talk and Text's Buddy 3388. New Buddy users were treated to free items such as Buddy tote bags, mesh bags, sunvisors, beach mats and caps. The more adventurous vacationers marked their holiday at the SMART Rei9ns booth with free Henna tattoo on Saturday from 2-6 PM as well as free skin accessories. Those seeking respite from the sun sought shelter in SMART's special lounge for subscribers.

Big Fish brought the house down with their pumping, pulsating dance event Slinky while smooth house music was entertaining the crowds in Cocomangas on the 19th of April with Studio 23's Beach House Party. All these events encapsulated the real vibe of the island: hot, sweaty, and full of energy.

SMART Rei9ns hit Subic Bay with the Jinx for Peace Concert last April 19, an event with Parokya ni Edgar and River Maya as the main attractions. A good crowd packed Remy Field as many of them enjoyed FREE concert tickets if they swapped their non-SMART SIM with a SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM, while existing SMART subscribers got FREE tickets if they downloaded the SMART logo into their cellphones. Meanwhile, the Amazing Phone was a hit in the Subic Yacht Club where tech-savvy cellphone users were 'amazed' by the phone's numerous useful features. All-in-all Subic warmed to SMART's brand of cellphone service by swapping their SIMs for SMART SIMs and taking home brand new Nokia 3315s, TNT Buddy 3388s, and Nokia 2100s.

In the cool mountains of Baguio, SMART sponsored bars Pilgrims, Cactus and Gimbalis, heated-up their floors with fun-loving teens.

Sugar Beach in Bantayan was the center of celebrations for SMART Rei9ns in Cebu. SMART wooed the beach lovers as they swapped their non-SMART SIMs for SMART Buddy SIMs and were grateful for the OTA (over-the-air) reloading service. Free Celfone Charging was a big-time hit in the beach where many people in need of a charge were left without an outlet or charger.

This created a warm sense of community within the SMART subscribers as Moms, Dads, Kids, Lolas, and Lolas all proudly wore the SMART Rei9ns sticker. SMART health buffs meanwhile, drew sports enthusiasts from all over the country to their well-attended Triathlon event.

SMART subscribers looking for some thrills and spills were treated to free tickets to Enchanted Kingdom. Subscribers who used SMART Money to buy one (1) ride-all-you-can ticket or by downloading an EK Mobile Coupon after buying one (1) ride-all-you-can ticket were able to receive FREE entrance! This offer will be good until the end of May for SMART subscribers. Amusement park-goers were also graced by the presence of SMART World Billiard Champion Django Bustamante at the SMART Rei9ns booth.

Whew, what a week! Is it over? Well, SMART subscribers can enjoy more events in these hot spots for the entire summer! So while you're enjoying even more you can check out these great promos.

A SMART 64K Super SIM purchase at just P199 will get you special discounts and prizes. Swap your SIM to SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM and prepare yourself for similar delights. You get a cool premium item via pick-a-prize promo. You can also get a Nokia 2100 or Nokia 3315 at discounted prices. These prices are exclusive to your hotspot of choice. SMART Rei9ns gives something for everybody. If what you want is a Call and Text card of P300.00, you still get a special premium item via pick-a-prize.

Talk N' Text users looking to upgrade their SIMs to Talk N' Text Power SIM or those who want to purchase a new Talk N' Text Power SIM for only P150 get an instant prize. You can also purchase a Buddy 3388 for only P1,990. Those who just want a call and text card for a minimum load of P300 you still get a special premium item via pick-a-prize.

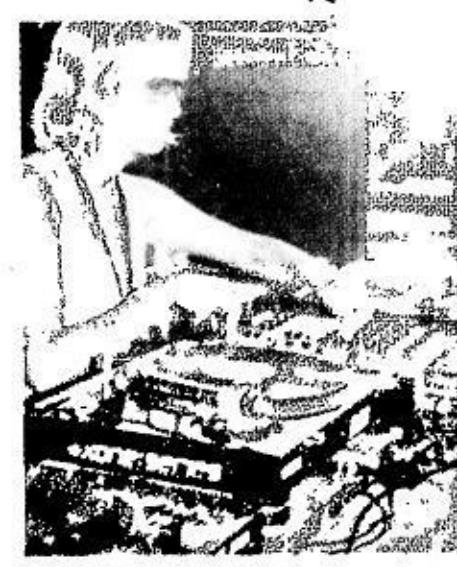

SMART Gold users can swap their SIM or avail of the Gold Rush package and get an exclusive premium item. The higher the plan, the more premium the item. SMART Gold users who activate 'My Calendar' or 'Horoscope' get a premium item via pick-a-prize.

You're on a sand bar, you need to call your friend over in the island, what do you do? Use SMART's Electronic Lending service and you can even enjoy as much as a P50 Bonus Load, for a minimum airtime purchase of P300. And even with a P250 airtime purchase, you still get a bonus load of P40.

Score a stylish mesh shopping bag when you enroll in the SMART Money Loyalty Program, and pay the P200 card fee. Register with SMART Mobile Coupon service by typing: Reg First NAME, Last NAME, Birthday, Gender, Interests, number of promo updates to be received per week and send this to 270. And just by signing up, you automatically get a special gift.

For those tech-savvy vacationers activate your MMS and GPRS features using your MMS-capable handset and get a chance to win a sizzling hot SMART MMS beach bag. Grab the chance to get marked with a SMART Rei9ns sticker tattoo by our roving SMART crew. Wear it with pride and get caught wearing the sticker tattoo while using your SMART or Talk 'N Text cellphone in our hotspots and you'll be the lucky winner of an exclusive SMART Buddy Beach Mat.

So with all of these promos are you going to miss out being a SMART subscriber? Didn't think so. So while you're sunning yourself on the beach, relaxing over a meal with family, or dancing the night away in a hip bar at night always remember: this is your summer to RULE with SMART Rei9ns.

SIM Swap your way to cool summer treats

To add more spice to the festivities as SMART hit more than 9 million subscribers through the SMART Rei9ns summer campaign, SMART is once again offering its free SIM Swap program with an added twist: SIM Swap to SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM and get the superior features of the most powerful SIM to date, thanks to the combined power of SMART zed and SMART Money. Plus, avail of cool summer collectibles exclusive to SMART Rei9ns hotspots.

By SIM Swapping to SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM, you enter a world of limitless possibilities at your fingertips not available from any other wireless network. For starters, you can experience the innovative convenience of cashless shopping and purchasing through SMART Money. Plus, only SMART zed gives you a plethora of services ranging from hip logo and ringtone downloads to a wealth of information like news and traffic updates—direct to your SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM.

And for that added twist, there's another cool reason to switch to a SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM: since April 16 and lasting till the end of summer, hip summer items like mesh bags, tote bags, caps, visors and beach mats are being dished out for free as a summer treat to those who SIM Swap to SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM. Now, that's one amazing offer you won't find anywhere else.

The SMART Rei9ns festivities have been in full swing since April 12, taking all the hotspots across the country by storm: Camp John Hay in Baguio, Boardwalk in Subic, Enchanted Kingdom, Lower Beach in Batangas, Punta Fuego, White Beach in Puerto Galera, Station 3 of Boracay, Bantayan in Cebu and The Venue in Davao are the destinations that have been blitzed by a series of concerts, games and dazzling firework displays to celebrate over 9 million happy subscribers on the SMART network. Watch out as SMART continues to rule over Manila in the coming weekends, with more cool happenings and concerts coming your way. SIM Swapping to SMART Buddy 64K Super SIM is plain sailing—just visit the SMART Rei9ns booths at any of the mentioned hotspots and you can SIM Swap right there, on the spot!

So when partying in any of the SMART Rei9ns hotspots, be warned against lazing in the sun too much or you'll miss out on this fantastic SIM Swap offer.

substance in this one. PAC*"Living With the Enemy: A Diary of the Japanese Occupation"By Pacita Pestano-Jacinto
Anvil Publishing

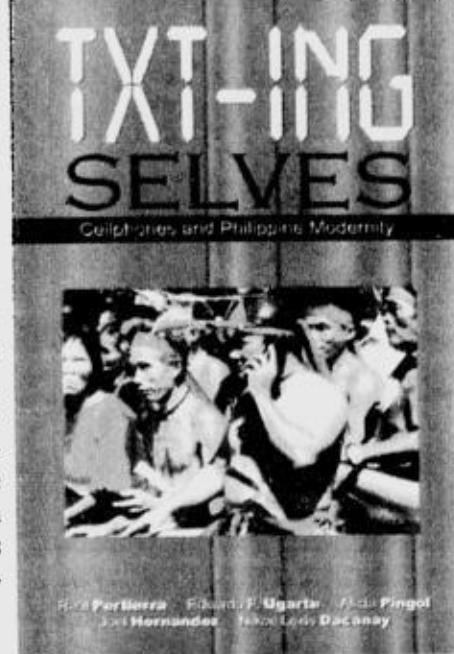

Reveals everyday life under the Japanese invaders during the Second World War in devastating detail. Told from the point of view of a young wife and expectant mother, the diary offers perceptive insights on how patriots and politicians can turn into collaborators with the florid turn of a phrase, while ordinary men and women become heroes with their plain good sense.

Now that SARS has clipped the wings of even the most adventurous traveler, this cookbook should prove the perfect alternative, giving you a taste of Asia, Europe, Africa, the Mediterranean and Latin America, without you leaving your kitchen. Although most ingredients can be expensive and difficult to find (though the author gives tips on where to buy them or what substitutes to use), the recipes are friendly enough for aspiring globetrotters and dilettantes to try. PAC

Comic Books:"Mars Ravelo's Darna" No. 1 (of 3)By Boboy Yonzon, Ryan Orosco and Gilbert Monsanto
Mango Comics

It is always a pleasure to see Philippine komiks' most treasured icon back in graphic glory. Mango Comics' "Mars Ravelo's Darna" updates the flying heroine just in time for the next century. Ryan Orosco and Gilbert Monsanto's art is amazing and the colors and quality make this debut title a visual feast. Unfortunately, Darna, speaking in English, seems to be rather bland and virtually indistinguishable from various versions of DC Comics' Wonder Woman. While this is the first in a three

Rolly Portillo, Eduardo F. Ugarte, Maja Pingol, J. Hernandez, Tito Lopez-Dacanay

One of Philippine comicdom's true treasures has finally returned. This affordable new edition collects the eight issues of Alanguilan's seminal series of mini-comics, first available in 1994. Almost a decade hence, Alanguilan's cathartic epic of heartbreak, with its grim humor, hot-button issues and starkly compelling black-and-white art, vibrates with an irresistible, violent truth despite the years since its first release. The reason for the "mature readers" tag isn't just the 15 or so fatalities—it's the dark heart of the series itself, one that we just might recognize in ourselves. And that is bloody genius in itself. "Wasted: Final Edition" lets us go home, thankfully alive but changed forever. RSDV

From our writers:"Nightmare Journeys: Filipina Sojourns through the World of Trafficking"By Rina Jimenez-David Milstores Publishing Inc.

INQUIRER columnist Rina Jimenez-David's gift is in always putting a human face to whatever issue she's taking on, a gift that keeps even the most uninvolved of readers reading. The gift works to the reader's advantage in this otherwise grim book. The stories of "Gina," "Maricar," "Patricia" and many others echo the same sad refrain of poverty, sexual abuse by people they trusted and loved, and unfulfilled dreams that sent them to unknown lands in search of work and a better life. Instead they got raped, beaten, robbed, turned away by their families and subjected to rigorous red tape by authorities. David makes some interesting observations in her foreword, including the fact that many families actually push the girls into this line of work. She also notes, however, that many of the girls never stop aspiring for a better life even after all the horror—a bright spot in this otherwise sobering read. Grab this if you want an eye-opener. These are stories that have to be told, and few could have told them better. ABH

"Writing Home: 19 Writers Remember Their Hometowns"Edited by Ruel S. De Vera
Anvil Publishing

SIM Associate Editor Ruey De Vera was right in his foreword: The Filipino is always looking to take root in a place close to the heart. This star-studded compilation is one of those works that make your chest swell with pride at the sheer talent of Filipino writers in English. The individual moments are priceless and could only have been drawn from unique experiences—John Silva's remembrance of sadness at sunset when leaving Villa Beach in Iloilo; the late Doreen Fernandez's memories of the sweet delights of Silay; Carlos Cortés' tribute to Sri Lumay, the man who made Cebu but who is hardly remembered after Humabon and Lapu-Lapu stole the spotlight. Our hands-down favorite must be the sparkling account of how Eileen Tabios, in cahoots with relatives, gave her Yankee husband his comeuppance after his exasperating fascination with a domestic creature. All the stories and most of the poems (including song lyrics by Joey Ayala) are fitting paens. Great stuff to ponder this summer that might just send you packing for the old province. ABH

"Cogito Ergo Sum and Other Musings on Science"Edited by Queena N. Lee-Chua
Ateneo de Manila University Press

Palanca Award-winner Lee-Chua seems determined to prove that science and scientific writing do not have to be boring—and she has, by and large, succeeded. The works by distinguished writers are divided into essays, poems, journalism and fiction, each in a distinct style. Take Cirilo Bautista's poem, written as a mathematical formula, about a man falling to his death, or Fabian Dayrit's elegant essay on sex and smell, or Angelo Lacuesta's story of medical students contemplating the man behind the cadaver. We particularly liked Isagani Cruz's short story on a future Filipino president equipped with her own Personal Orgasm Machine, a gadget that may become as ubiquitous as a cellphone (heaven forbid), and Annette Tamino's quietly heart-breaking poem on a turtle hatchling killed before it even makes it to the sea. Lee-Chua laments in her opening essay that "Today, we are constantly stimulated, yet somehow life seems lackluster, soulless, dull." Fortunately, this collection is anything but. ABH

Enchantments for Children

By Christine C. Rivero

Otherworldly magic and wonders of the daily sortabound in this summer's picks for kids*Foreign Publications:*"The Warlock of Firetop Mountain"By Steve Jackson and Ian Livingstone
Wizard Books

From the era of Choose-Your-Own-Adventure (read: the 1980s) come the Fighting Fantasy Gamebooks. In the first book of the reprinted series, a treasure seeker explores the maze-like enclave of a legendary warlock, and this treasure seeker happens to be you. As the main character, the reader is asked to make decisions and flip to a specified page to see the consequence. This is a standard feature of books in this genre, but Fighting Fantasy Gamebooks first ask you to create your character. Your character's stats are determined by dice rolls and anyone familiar with role-playing games, or RPG, will appreciate this detail. Another adaptation of the RPG system is the use of dice in combat to determine how much damage you or a monster inflicts. A non-dice option exists but what gamer worth his broadsword would prefer that? Map-making is also an essential skill in this engrossing story/game.

"Magic Steps"By Tamora Pierce Scholastic

Lady Sandrilene Pa Toren is a "stitch witch." In Emelan and Winding Circle, that is a mage who works magic using thread and the tag is not derogatory. Sandry is a special kind of stitch witch, though, because she treats magic itself as a thread. It's refreshing to see a fantasy novel with an intelligent teenage girl as the lead, and although this novel is the first book of a quartet, it can be taken as a stand-alone story. A few gory scenes appear in the narrative but these only serve to show the vileness of unremitting hatred.

"So You Want to Be a Wizard"By Diane Duane Magic Carpet Books, Harcourt Inc.

In these post-Voldemort days, its title probably raises eyebrows. Yet this book, first published in 1983, tells an engaging story about two young New Yorkers (Hispanic-Americans, to be precise) who discover magic and much more. The narrative's long prologue can be a drawback, but it is here where the principles of wizardry are explained. A young reader who avoids the urge to skip the textbook-y parts will learn that wizards exist to conserve the Universe's energy. A "spell" is also cleverly interpreted as a description of an object and would-be writers will thrill to know that "wizards love words." Originality and top-notch storytelling make this an excellent first book for a series of five.

Philippine Publications:"The Flying Friar"

By Joseph V. Landy, illustrated by Frances C. Alcaraz

Tahanan Books for Young Readers

Did you know that Thomas Aquinas is the patron saint of people endangered by lightning? Or that St. Teresa of Avila is the patron of those who suffer from migraines? Over the centuries, people have assigned a certain saint to intercede for them, whether it's to help them cook a better meal (St. Lawrence) or safeguard an entire country (the Sacred Heart of Mary). In cheerful language that avoids excessive moralizing, Fr. Joseph Landy retells the life-story of 26 of these patron saints. Parents might occasionally be needed to explain phrases like "this happy conjunction of sanctity and worldly success" but children will generally have little trouble understanding the text. Stained glass-style illustrations enhance each story, but it's a pity they aren't in color.

"Maya Maya Jumbolaya"

By Gidget R. Jimenez, illustrated by Pepper Roxas

Tahanan Books for Young Readers

The little birds know they're in trouble the moment they hear, "Mumbo Jumbo, Mumbo Jumbo, I've got a hungry ache in my tumblo!" Maya Maya, the "big bad bully bird," has come to steal their lunch again. Greed can only go so far, though, and Maya Maya learns the hard way (let's just say it involves big paws and sharp claws.) Rhyming sentences and bright googly-eyed drawings make this book ideal for pre-schoolers. For best effects, read aloud and give that "mumbo jumbo" all the flapping, stomping, harrumphing energy you've got.

"Sarap Maging Bata! Storybooks"

By various authors

Tahanan Books for Young Readers and Unicef

Two silly old kings wage a war that lasts years long. Gangs of lice settle in a little girl's head. A young boy copes with life in an evacuation center. Cinderella and Superman encourage a street child to go back to school. These are some of the 10 stories in this set of books that celebrates the rights of a child. Authors include multi-awarded Rene Villanueva and Dr. Luis Gatmaitan, with artwork by the members of Ang Illustrador ng Kabataan. The stories are as varied as they are colorful with none of that lesson-crammed-down-your-throat aftertaste. Read-aloud fans will particularly enjoy the numerous sound-effects of Ma. Corazon Remigio's "Sip-Sip." It will also teach them to appreciate different points of view, even if it involves something as simple as eating.

"Og Uhog"

By Christine S. Bellen, illustrated by Jason Moss

Lampara Books

You've probably met Og, the kid in class who always has a bit of snot dangling from his nose. In the introduction, Dr. Luis Gatmaitan explains how some children are snotty-nosed because they haven't yet learned to control their nasal breathing. Still, it doesn't stop other children from being mean to someone like Og. In the end, though, Og does learn to blow his nose and a nasty little girl gets her comeuppance. The book revels in the gross sense of humor kids relish without losing sight of the healthy lesson it intends to impart.

"The Zimbragatzees of the Planet Zing"

Lampara Books

Zimbragatzees have all sorts of noses. Some have long snouty noses. Others have short, stumpy noses. A few even have striped or fuzzy noses. And if they didn't have noses, the Zimbragatzees would all look alike. What happens then when, one day, their noses just vanish? This zany Palanca award-winning story reminds kids to care about the environment, especially since great ideas can come from them too. With quirky illustrations by Jason Moss, expect this book to become a favorite.

Dear Fall,

When opportunity arises, most men would likely flirt around. But they would do so with different levels of seriousness. There are those who would just toy with the thought and there would be those who would seriously consider making a pass. But it doesn't always mean that they want to change their partners. It is a selfish justification but that's just how most men are.

Fall, what worries me is not how Mark reacted to your little experiment but why you had to test him in the first place. Jealousy, to a certain extent, keeps a relationship on its feet. But, when it goes beyond reason and sensibility, it does more harm than good. Unwarranted suspicion puts a lot of pressure in the relationships that we want to preserve in the first place.

It is a fact that there are a lot of men who have been unfaithful to their partners. When an incidence of infidelity comes out in the open, women are traumatized and hurt. They find it difficult to forgive, to understand and to trust again. They still hold on because of love but they suffer silently inside.

Fall, we should not suffer because we chose to love someone. Real love should bring us happiness and a reassuring sense of security. You have realized something very important. We should not count on others for our happiness. If we do, we would be forever prisoners of the fear of being alone. Real happiness should come from within us. It starts with self-appreciation which brings out confidence that battles against fears of unnecessary jealousy. Insecurity just breeds contempt. Let us always remember that the best way to keep a relationship is not in magnifying the faults in it but in looking at the good it has done and strengthening it with love, trust and respect.

"Anina ng Mga Alon"

By Eugene Evasco

Adarna House

Imagine growing up among a people whose life and very soul is the sea, and you are the only one who was born on land. As a Badjao, Anina often ponders the circumstances of her birth. She knows her people call themselves "children of the sea" but she cannot yet say if she is one herself. Grand-prize winner of the 2002 Pilar Perez Medallion, this lyrical novel is rich reading for all ages. The Badjao way of life is described in bountiful detail, and the threats to their existence, from dynamite fishing to the military-insurgent conflict in the south, are similarly underscored. Forced to leave the sea of their ancestors, Anina's family faces even greater difficulty in the parched city. Yet wherever she goes, Anina sees the swell and ripple of waves in all things, leaving little doubt as to where her own soul has always been moored.

Adarna House

A little boy delights in his father's account of a dust-busting, laundry-whitening, lullabye-singing superhero in this humorous take on the not-so-humorous reality of OFW parents being separated from their children. As more children grow up with one or both parents working in another country, this award-winning story not only dramatizes a way of life that is becoming more common, but its gentle approach might yet provide some comfort to these parents and the children they leave behind.
